Well, Ahriman is either greatly influencing Oriko or outright possessing her.

If I recall correctly, in the Kharn flashback, Ahriman was a fanatic who worshipped "the Blessed Lady". However now her followers seem very anti-pinky. Lucius openly mocked Pinky and condemned Chiaki for using GWs.

So Ahriman has either forgotten her previous religious beliefs or feels betrayed since Pinky let her die and even helped Kharn to kill her.

I also just realised the amusing hypocrisy of the whole thing. See the quote below from the fight against Lucius.

"Kh...!" Lucius jumps back, sword held en garde as she puts distance between the both of you. "So this is how the Corrupted Warmaster of the Ninth fights? With her Blessed Lady's sickening gifts?" She shakes her head here, before pointing her weapon at you. "Now I see the truth of it. You are beyond saving, Chiaki Matsuda. Submit yourself to my blade, and an honorable death."

And yet, we know that Oriko/Ahriman is the prophet Lucius reveres and she uses the golden staff. I wonder actually if that would be something usable in getting information out of the prisoners.

For example, how would the girl Mami is interrogating react if we revealed to her that her prophet is actually so powerfull only because she is using one of the "Blessed Lady's sickening gifts"

It also suggests that the prisoners probably don't know all that much about things. Or atleast they don't know that the Prophet has a GW.

Standard purge pattern, you reply, taking a page out of Sayaka's book by using Officio language wherever possible. By that you mean, you're going to kill every single person involved with Oriko's little outfit. You're not going to leave anything to chance. No more loose ends, you can't afford another blood vendetta that'll get other people around you involved.

Kirika nods at this. "What about Oriko, then?"

Standard hostage recovery pattern, you reply just as quickly. Because that's what she is, isn't she? A hostage. Whether on her own doing or by Ahriman controlling her, it doesn't matter. You'll do your best to rescue her from the shit she'd dived headfirst into, and let the cards fall where they may after that.

"..." The former Eversor Rank Leader falls silent again, before speaking up. "Bring me with you, when you go to purge those under her command. Let me assume control when you face her, Murderface." She swallows here, hard, audibly, as if each word is scorching her throat, as if it's that painful to say. "I'll do my best to get through to her at that moment. If there's nothing that can be done, then I'll kill her myself."

...Can she do something like that?

"No, I can't." Kirika shakes her head, and it's here that you see that her hands are trembling. Dislodging a few paper cranes from her lap. "But someone else may get it wrong. That's why I have to do it."

How do you respond?

[]...Alright. Can I count on you not being a homicidal bitch until then?

I has a suspicion that Sayaka is going to talk to us aboout the Church Cult after our training session.

She might even introduce us to Amber if we destroy her sword again.

You ask Kirika a question of your own, this time. A question that you've already made up your mind on - otherwise, you wouldn't be here.

Does she think that Oriko can be saved?

It's here that the eyepatched Eversor laughs. Not a cackle, but a tired, weary, defeated kind, almost sounding like a shuddering exhalation of breath.

"Think back on our death bout, Murderface. Think back on the events that lead to my death." She shakes her head. "You couldn't have saved me even if you wanted to. Even if you exhausted every and all means to do so."

She looks down at her hands, again. "I didn't want to be saved. I wanted it. I wanted what the Blessed Lady could offer me, I wanted what the Blessed Lady promised. And it was such bliss, such...ecstasy. To be so sure, finally, of something, in a world full of uncertainties." Another laugh. "I didn't care whose blood ended up staining my clothes, my face, my sword. You, Mami...even Oriko. As long as the blood flowed, I cared not from whence it came."

Kirika grabs a fistful of the paper cranes, now, and flings them down the ledge. When she speaks again, her voice is strained, not from pain but from the effort of bringing out something that should have been buried. A pain akin to tearing old wounds open to bleed anew.

"Oriko...Oriko's smart. She's kind. And yet, she was stupid enough to think that I could have been someone better." Kirika shrugs a slender shoulder, not turning to look at you. "Unwarranted optimism, in droves. It was one of her many qualities that made me hate her the moment I met her." A pause. "It also convinced me that she would make me whole."

Without warning, the former Eversor Rank Leader of the Ninth Officio pushes the entire pile of paper cranes off her lap and into the empty space beyond the ledge - scattering them in a haphazard cloud of carefully-folded paper. It's here that she stands up.

Apparently /tg/ doesnt like clingy. I mean, I remember how I at first disliked Midori, too, for the same reason because of how she started out.

But she kinda mellowed out after we gave her the Murderface-Expierience-Talk and probably because of Barrier and Amnesia too.

"The chances of Oriko being saved are laughably slim. I know what a Golden Weapon can do to someone with an established contract." She nods at you. "And you know what they can do to a civilian."

Yes. You do.

"Slim as they are, the fact that there's still a chance warrants an attempt. As many attempts as it takes." Kirika offers you a hand - and you blink once at it, before taking it and allowing her to pull you up back to your feet. "Even if I will forget her eventually - even if I do turn into a stark-raving bitch ghost inside a pretty knife - I can go to that hell without the regret of not doing everything I can for her." She shrugs again. "Hopefully, she will forgive me in the afterlife."

...Well, she doesn't have to worry about that.

It's now that Kirika blinks her one good eye at you. "Whatever are you talking about, Murderface?"

You shake your head. You won't give her all the control. You'll be facing Oriko together. If it comes to that - if she really can't be saved - then you'll be the one to kill Oriko.

Even you know that Kirika doesn't need that kind of guilt. That kind of misery. And you hate her fucking guts!

The former Eversor Rank Leader nods quietly at this, before letting go of your hand and turning away. "...I appreciate it, Murderface. I truly do."

Well, that's--

"Now get the fuck out of here." She doesn't so much as look at you, now, merely staring down the lip of the Helipad. "I've remembered enough, for now. Too much, and I may remember why I've always hated you."

...Right. Fine. You'll leave.

Before you go, though...

"It's fucking -december-, why is it so god damn hot?" Megan asks while taking another swig of her water bottle.

"Ah, you weren't born here I take it?" Izzy looks at her, who is starting to become a sweaty mess. It's not our fault, nor the weathers fault, that she decided to wear a long sleeve shirt with pants on the hottest day of the week for a camping trip.

"She will need to get used to it." Sami chimes in from behind us, nonchalant as ever. "Those who cant stand the heat die under it. Usually."

"Aww, come on Sami, isn't that a bit harsh?" Izzy pushes Sami forward and hooks her to Izzy's side, keeping her head snug inbetween her arm and chest. "There are people all over the world who dream about coming over here because of the weather, so-"

"They're here for Disneyland, Six Flags, Legoland, Knots Berry Farm and Universal Studios. Maybe Seaworld too." I add in from the front, keeping an eye on the trail ahead. "At least we're not as bad as, say, Hawaii or anything."

We, the group of four, linger on in our walk towards the campground. This was orginally Izzy's idea, surprisingly, just for her and Sami. Then Sami proclaimed that she wouldn't go anywhere far away if I wasn't there (why?) then Megan states she following us so that she could try to find my weaknessas it is her duty of a rival (again, why?) and we're here now. Even now I can still remember the look on Eightball's face when we all came in asking for a weekend off.

...Fucking cat alien. Even if I do owe him my life I'll get him someday.

"Calm down." Sami looks dejected as she says this, most likely haven given up all hope on escaping Izzy's grasp. "You can wait to vent."

And the head of orange hair to my right would like to disagree.

"Everyone, down and be quiet." At Izzy'a command we all squat down in uniform fashion, almost . A few months of training does that to people, and I was lucky enough to do both Callidus stealth training AND some Eversor training.

"The hell is it, Izzy? I didn't see a damn thing."

"You weren't trained to see things, Megan. I was." The burn aside, she is the only Vindicare among us, and I'd trust her eyes more than my own in a heartbeat.

Sure enough, some rattling of bushes nearby silences everyone. We all continue to hunker down as the sound of grass being stepped on continues to move until Izzy pops her head out and... squees in joy?

"Ahh, I knew there would be some on the trip!" We all raise our heads to see an elk wandering around about 10 meters from us. It looks at us for a while, probably due to the most mature lady here, and returns to its buisness uninterested in us.

"Yes, and there's a good chance there'll be more later on. Come on, let's at least get to the campsite before you start stalking animals." I drag her by the arm and manage to start moving. Sami and Megan sigh in relief (or grief, maybe both) and begin following.

Another hour passes until we hit the camp site, marked by the bench, the outdoors do-it-yourself grill and the "campfire", which at this point is nothing more than a circle of rocks surrounding a pile of ash. There's a big tree right next to bench, but other than that there's nothing special. It doesn't take long to divide up the areas among us; Izzy takes her her place near the tree, Sami joins mine next to the camp fire (much to Izzys dissapointment) and Megan takes her place in the middle of us.

"The hell are we supposed to do with this?" Megan comments while standing over the fireplace. "Whoever used it last left nothing for us to use! Isn't that how its supposed to-"

She's abruptly cut off as a pile of small wood logs is dumped from Izzys backpack right next to the fireplace. "All campers are expected to bring their own tools, supplies and resources, Megan. Surely I can expect you to have fulfilled those requirements~?"

Even if it was only for a glimpse of a moment, the look on her face was pricelss.

"And before you complain, this isn't like you elementary school trips." I add in, beginning to unpack my tent. "This is a test of survival, endurence and skill. Well, at least that's what I said to Eightball so we could come here. So, i implore you; what DID you bring?"

"....Soda." Right off the bat something that shouldn't be here. "Sleeping bag, hammock, toothpaste and brush, soap, clothes, phone, wallet, tablet-"

"Enough." Sami adds in while holding her head. "It already hurts."

"Well nobody told me what to bring!"

"Because you invited yourself. Reap what you sow."

TIme passes as we get the camp together, and right after everything is set we head out. Izzy, having pre-planned the entire event, already has a map marked with everything of interest. First place to go to was a nearby waterfall; not large but sizable enough to enjoy the view. Aparently for some it just wasn't enough.

"Ahh, I needed thissss..." Megan sighs in relief as she dips her bare feet in the water, content on just sitting on the ground as the water runs along.

"You had no hiking shoes. Expected results." Sami talks after she finds a spot on the other end of the river, eyeing the considerably red feet.

"I thought the boots would be perfectly fine for today." She glances at the pair she took with her, brown and leather-bound. "Guess not, but I'll be fine knowing this for later on. Give me a fucking break okay?"

"I'm not sure if you're going to get that break." I comment from the side. "From your position it's giving Izzy a good opportunity to push you in."

In an instant, as expected of a trained Eversor, her legs arch out of the river as she back-flips from sitting position and turns on landing to be face-to-face with... a soaked white shirt.

...I've never really bothered with it before, but how does she manage to keep her balance throwing knives with those huge-

"Aw, geez! You all need to stare at them don't you~?" Izzy remarks as she crosses her arms over her chest, blocking view to the red/white bra.

"I think it's perfectly legitimate for anyone to be jealous of yours!" Megan points a finger at her in protest.

"Well, I sure didn't say anything about jealousy~."

"YOU GET THE POINT THOUGH, RIGHT?!"

Shenanigans like that continued throughout the day, ranging place to place from an open meadow to the very top of a hill overlooking the rest of the park (I'm pretty sure Megan almost died there from her feet). Once dusk began to fall we made our way back to campsite; me and Sami were preparing our dinner with a gas cooker while Izzy was teaching Megan how to set the campfire up.

"Wow, you two did a really nice job this time!" Izzy comments as she begins chewing on another piece of well cooked steak. Medium rare, always the way to go.

"Yea, I'll admit this isn't bad at all." Even Megan looks happy with her food, a light smile on her lips as some juice begins pouring out of her mouth. Pure rabbits look right there.

"It was mostly her, she just told me when to move stuff." Sami, already done with her plate, adds in when she swallows and heads back to her backpack.

"Whatever, I like food." And who doesn't? No one could rebuttle that.

Soon after everyone else had finished eating as Sami came back with- OH HELL NO.

"Sami... why did you bring any if you were only going to bring ONE?" I ask as she walks over to the campfire with a metal stick with a marshmellow impaled onto it.

"Your loss for not thinking about it." She begins to twirl the stick over the fire while everyone else watches in envy. A while later she takes the marshmellow off, reaches into her bag and pulls out... gram crackers and chocolate.

God damn it, why didn't I think of this.

"Aw, Sami! You could at least let me have a bite, please~?" I'm forced to hold Izzy in place as she begins to lean over and reach over to the now-complete smore.

"Let's at least be civilised people and maybe talk about something as she speaks?" I protest while slowly dragging Izzy back down to her seat.

"Well, what's there to talk about?" Soon after Megan asks the question Sami makes some sort of noise through her mouth and holds her hand up high. When her mouth is empty she speaks.

"Who were we before the eighth, and why did we come there?"

The campsite goes quiet save for the crackling of the fire and Sami continuing to eat her smore, the questions asks beforehand holding onto everone else's thoughts. Me and Sami have already had this conversation before so we know about each other but it's a different situation to bring these two into it.

"Fine, I'll start since one of us already knows what happens." I give in and warm my hands by the fire before continuing.

"I was an only child in my family, but I was the only thing that was keeping everything together. The atmosphere at the house was tense at best, but whenever I would come home from school, piano practice or whatever it would be a complete wreck, and either one of them or both of my parents would be bleeding somewhere." Izzy had a sorrowful look while Megan looked like she couldn't ever believe what I was saying. "I knew what was going on even if they didn't tell me, but at school I always managed to look like a normal girl. I was good at putting a mask on myself; I got it from my parents."

"That happened for a while until I became a teenager. As all of you know, reaching that age makes you more independent, or at least gives you the drive to become it. With myself gone from the house more often, the tension between my parents got worse every week." Deep breath. "Then dad snapped, or maybe it was mom. Either of them were far enough down the road to have it happen. But one day I snuck back home to hear my parents fighting like normal, until one of them screamed bloody murder." Another pause, keeping on their seats, then...

"In the end, my father killed my mom, and fainted before he could kill me." Their expressions get worse while Sami continues eating, since she knows whats coming. "Out of shock I couldn't do anything, I couldn't call the police. My fathereventually died from bleeding out, but he probably would have lived if I had called. But I just hid up in my bedroom for about two days until the neighbors called the cops because we -weren't- making any noise."

"I was kept at an orphanage until I made my contract, then ran off so they never could find me again. I just wanted to get out of there, away from the constant pain that I felt there from abandoned children. My wish was to take pain away from others and to put it onto those who deserve it. Thats roughly me today."

Again, dead silence as the rest of the group watches me put another log onto the camfire. "Sami, your turn."

"Was an orphan from birth, grew up in an orphanage, never wanted nor spoken too, joined the eighth because I wanted to actually do stuff, wished for the power that would make nobody be able to get in my way of what I want to do."

...I expected as much.

"Any, err, details?" Megan asks with some hesitation.

"Don't try to pry any out of her." Ah, the fire does feel nice. "Did that a long time ago and it didn't give to anything." She seems distraught at my story but lets it slide."

"Well now I just feel bad." She replies while rubbing her arms. "I mean, compared to you guys I've had a pretty good life. Wealthy, happy family that always pampers me and feeds me and..." Groaning she looks at the dirt, twisitng her foot into the ground. "It just got so much on my nerves. I didn't -need- them looking over me every single step I took. They also didn't let me do anything to physical when they feared that it could harm me. Isn't that the point of how you get tougher with sports!? Eightball was hesitant to even contract me but aparently my wish to be free got to him. Yea, so I had the best life any girl could have and I wished it all away just so I could do my own shit. Megan nearly curls up into a ball but flinches at Izzy's grasp, who is lightly running her fingernails across her back. "Don't think we'll see you any less because of what you did." Izzy speaks lightly, softly. I've rarely seen her like this before, and every other time was with Sami. "I'll admit my story is bad too. I couldn't stop some bullying that was affecting my friend who later commited suicide. I just wished for the ability to protect my future friends." She immdiately turns and hugs Sami before I can reach her. "That's why I'm doing my best to protect and guide all of you okay~?"

"Ooh, I got an idea! How about we make one of those pledge circles?" Izzy chimes in as she releases herself from Sami. "We can all make a circle pledges like in elementry school! Quick, everyone around the campfire!" I stand and take my spot on the other side of the campfire while Izzy moves Sami into position and repositions herself. "Now, everyone extend their hands out and hold hands, then close your eyes." I feel two very different hands on each side; the small ones of Sami in my right and the tense yet strong ones of Megan on the left.

"Soo.... anyone have any ideas on what to pledge for?"

"Wow, really Izzy? All this for nothing?"

"You can think of something, right?"

"I got one." I tighten my hands a bit to calm them both down. Not the best pledge, but this will work for me. "I pledge to never crumble under reality, to never falter in duty and to survive in this world at all costs." I peek my eyes open to see that everyone seems to agree with it, then close them again. "Then, one, two, three."

"I pledge to never crumble under reality, to never falter in durt and to survive in this world at all costs."

And so our pledge was made, and we continued to live in a world of magic and witches.

Thank you for the quest! Here are couple of questions that came up during this thread.

1)Is the winged-fragment Midori saw in the barrier different from the Homucifer/Transcendent One that Chiaki saw in the scrying mirror.

2)Did we manage to guess the upgrade requirement of the DEagle correctly? That is to say, its upgraded by convincing the winged-incarnation to appear in the mirror and getting her to work with the rest of us.

3)Kirika says the spirits inside the golden weapons lose their memories. Are the incarnations inside our DEagle also losing memories, or are they somehow special due to the general craziness that caused them to come into being? Or due to the fact that in a strange way Chiaki is them and they are Chiaki, and Chiaki has not died yet.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 03/23/14(Sun)08:43 No.31014638

You don't have anything else for the one-eyed spirit inside the XX Golden Weapon, so you finally make to leave. As soon as you try to do so, however, it's here that Kirika barks your name out to stop you.

"Murderface."

Blinking at this, you turn to her. The hell is it now, then? You've got a lot of things to do, and not much time to do them. What does she want?

"You're going to train with Sayaka again tomorrow." She says this more of a statement than a question. "Don't look at me like that - that filthy mongrel with the dog ears has been bragging up and down about your last training session. You are planning to use Muramasa, is that correct?"

That's the plan, you nod at her. Blueberry even requested it herself.

"Good." It's here that a smile finally curls Kirika's lips, her one red-dotted eye glinting. "I look forward to it."

You're not sure if you should take that as a blessing or a warning. Maybe both.

>>31014638

"Smart." Kirika nods appreciatively. "And yes, before you ask, you're free to leave." She waves her hand dismissively at you before turning away again, like some sort of royalty granting permission to a filthy peasant to go about their business being filthy and peasantlike.

You suppress your sudden burning desire to know what happens when you shoot a Golden Weapon spirit at the back of her head and finally, FINALLY make to leave - when Kirika calls your name again.

"WHAT?" You fairly scream the question, and Kirika's grin grows even wider.

"Green hair is the danger." She drawls, and it's here that the entire skyline of Mitakihara disappears around you, landing you back in the cold frigidity of your personal weapon vault - a convenient moment before you could pull the trigger on the .44 Magnum that had suddenly, mysteriously dropped onto your right hand.

GOD DAMMIT. FUCKING BITCH. FUCKING SMUG ONE-EYED WHORE.

After a minor temper tantrum involving the unsheathed, flat blade of Muramasa and some of the steel plate walls of your vault - all of them sporting some rather nasty cracks and impact indentations - it's here that you finally toss the XX Golden Weapon back into its rack, uncaring whether or not it actually fell into the hooks properly or not. Even in death, she still makes you so fucking mad sometimes.

You take a moment to catch your breath, and to light up another cigarette. All while still growling epithets underneath your breath.

What do you do now?

...Well. You'll leave talking to the Three Stooges some other time. You've reached your quota of talking to dead people for one day. You'd like for Braids to have some time to cool off, too, after you pissed her off on the way back to Mitakihara.

Seriously, though. You and Sayaka? You shake your head, a shiver dancing its way down your spine.

You glance at your meager collection of Golden Weapons, and decide to take your usual with you - the IX and VIII Golden Weapons, or namely the gauntlets and your Desert Eagle.

You could almost hear Yuu sigh in both relief and joy as you fit each golden circlet around your wrists, underneath your own costume's already-frayed and blood-encrusted sleeves. Your Desert Eagle ends up strapped to your side, courtesy of the white snakeskin shoulder holster you've had customized for it.

...Ugh. Strapping the shoulder holster on had you catching a whiff of yourself, and while it's not as bad as it had gotten before - when you spent literal weeks and months without touching water or soap to your body, sleeping off hangover after hangover in your own costume - going to any formal ceremony in this kind of state is going to set off some very wrong signals.

Besides, you're Warmaster now. Watch-wearing Dildo Prime. Stop fighting it and embrace it already.

With your business with the Golden Weapons all but settled, you leave your personal vault - throwing Muramasa a dirty look just as the doors closed - and then make your way to your own personal office. You get there quickly enough, the corridors you needed to walk through pleasantly not all that populated (probably because it's still a bit early). You slam the heavy door to your office closed, lock the door behind you, and then cancel your transformation.

It's this strange sensation that makes you shiver in your underwear now, a sensation that you do your best to shake off as you stumble towards your personal quarters' bathroom. You take off the shoulder holster - along with your Desert Eagle - onto your quarters' bed as you pass it, and leave your glasses and the bracelets by the sink as you step into the bathroom proper. A twist of a few dials and some push-button adjusting of the thermostat - and you get to cleaning yourself from head to scar-lined body to toe, in preparation for ceremonies that you have no idea how to behave in.

In the middle of shampooing, however, it's here that a voice suddenly speaks out in the bathroom itself - very nearly making you jump, slip on the sudsy floor, and break your skull open on the tilework. You look around, eyes wide, only to find a small speaker set near the bathroom's ceiling.

"Warmaster?" The voice is feminine, silky-smooth, but polite and just a bit more elegant than Kirika's. Enishi. "Warmaster, are you in? I'm sorry if I'm interrupting something, but I just need a moment of your time..."

...For fuck's sake. First time you're actually taking a shower on your own free will and volition, and somebody's at the fucking door?

You growl at this, before looking around your bathroom again. Ah, there it is - a push-button receiver, set away from the shower area and embedded into the wall at your eye level. A way to reply to visitors if you're on the can or taking a shower. That's...how Warmasters roll, you suppose.

What do you do?

[]Ignore it. Maybe she'll go away and bug you about whatever it is later. You need to get CLEAN.

Wiping your now-matted hair away from your eyes and face - the rest of it sticking to your shoulders and back like some sort of wet, soggy skin - it's here that you plod over to the bathroom receiver and jab a wet, sudsy index finger into the 'TALK' button. A small beep quietly sounds, and you take it as a signal to start...well, talking.

"I'm naked," You growl at the small waterproofed receiver, allowing your frank displeasure to color your voice. "What do you want?"

Enishi's gasp carries clearly and loudly on the intercom speaker set on the ceiling, and you grit your teeth in mild frustration as she starts to stutter. "O-oh! I...I apologize, Matsuda-s-sama! I didn't know you were indisposed to that k-kind of extent! I'll approach you some other time--"

"What. Is. It." You growl the sentence word for word, not louder, but with much more emphasis on the fact that if she doesn't come out with it NOW, there will be problems. Mainly involving your shower time being very rudely interrupted for nothing.

"Very...very well, then, Matsuda-sama! I apologize once more in advance!" There's a sudden terrible bravery in the Callidus Rank Leader's voice now, as if realizing that she'd screwed up and had just accepted her grisly fate.

"Just a few reminders that our Incubator wished me to convey to you before the ceremonies, which are as follows: 1. There is to be no drinking or smoking during the ceremonies themselves, 2. Take the squad naming seriously and with proper gravitas."

Tch. Well, leave it to the mutant cat bastard to be redundant.

Is there anything else? You ask as you start slathering expensive-smelling body soap over your scar-lined skin, making sure to pay attention to certain key areas and scrub them harder.

"O-oh, yes, just one last one - 3. Matsuda-sama will be asked to pick her own personal heraldry for her cap and greatcoat for her impending formal ratification as the Warmaster of the Ninth." Enishi takes a gasping breath here.

"Kyuubey has enlisted the artistic elements of our own Officio to try and conceive some potential emblems for you. The top five, as agreed upon via an Officio-wide poll, has been selected and printed out on a color sample, Matsuda-sama. I have it here with me, in a clear plastic file for your perusal. I'll just slip this under the door, shall I?"

Yeah, sure. Fine. Whatever. Can you go back to showering now?

"Um...j-just one last personal matter, Matsuda-sama." It's here that Enishi's voice lowers conspiratorially. "Um, Warmaster, as I'm sure you've heard, my little sister has one of her...ridiculous shows tonight, and...I've discovered that she may have been a bit presumptuous with her invitation of you as a guest of honor."

She swallows audibly here. "If...if this obligation has caused undue stress on you, Warmaster, then please allow me to apologize on my younger sister's behalf."

How do you respond?

You take a moment to rinse your hair before replying. Enishi...well, she doesn't need to apologize for Noriko, not as such. You would've loved to attend, if it weren't for your Warmaster duties. You don't really get the M-idol stuff yourself, but you wouldn't have minded showing support for Enishi's younger sister at least.

"You're...you're much too kind, Matsuda-sama." Enishi's voice crackles from the speaker on the ceiling. "I...I will make sure to pass on your sentiments, if that is permissible..."

Yeah, why not. No objections there - in fact, if the Callidus doesn't have anything important scheduled, you'd like her to go and personally deliver both your sentiment and apology to her younger sister.

There's a slight pause here before Enishi replies. "Of...of course. As you command, Warmaster." Even through the speaker, even though you can't possibly see her face, you could tell that your Callidus Rank Leader is smiling. "Noriko's...well, she's always been a difficult sibling to deal with at the best of times, and while she will be disappointed that you can't attend...I'm sure that she'll understand." Another pause. "Thank you for your time, Matsuda-sama. Please, um...enjoy the rest of your shower."

Enishi offers no reply here, and you make to continue your shower when she suddenly speaks up again.

"Um, if you'd like, Matsuda-sama, I can wash your back for you--"

You cut her off, the denial leaping from your throat in a growl. NO. That's...no. You don't need anyone to wash your back for you. Thanks. That'll be all, you add, hoping that the Karasawa would take the hint and go.

"But Matsuda-sama, surely someone of your rank would--"

THAT'LL BE ALL.

"A-as you say, Matsuda-sama." The speaker emits a soft click, and you take that as the end of this particular visit. You shake your head here, before continuing your shower for real this time.

Christ. If Mami had only told you being Warmaster would entail this kind of thing...you'd have said no even if she promised you all the whisky pancakes you could eat.

You finish your shower after a good solid half hour, with most of that dedicated to drying your hair and following what Mami had taught you about being...presentable. With your ponytail set once more with a black rubber band and fresh underwear on, you engage your transformation again - your Soul Gem sparking as it manifests your costume around you once more. One hand automatically going under your skirt to adjust your pantyhose as it hitches up way too high once more.

There. That's much better, you think to yourself, before catching a glance of yourself at the mirror. ...Not too bad, if you do say so yourself. The ponytail had taken you some getting used to, and the upkeep is a bitch, but it's growing on you, that's for sure.

It's here that you realize that you've yet to acquire a new pair of glasses. You frown at your own reflection, before making a note to ask Mami for a replacement.

You move back to the office proper, picking up the clear file that Enishi had slipped under the door. Just like she said, five of the best ones - at least, the Officio voted for them, or something - were printed out on glossy white paper. They're...not that bad, admittedly. Some of them actually looks cool. They can probably wait till later, though - you're not really in a hurry to adopt a new emblem.

You decide to get a few drinks inside you while checking out the emblems in closer detail. You still have time before the certification ceremony, after all, and Kyuubey did say there wasn't to be any drinking or smoking then. You just came back from a successful mission, so you deserve a small treat at least.

Just as you make to stand up and walk over to your Office's newly-installed liquor cabinet, it's here that you remember something about this Office. It was a long time ago, back when you were still part of Kharn's official Warmaster retinue. Whenever you got summoned to her office - for some reason or another - you remember her reaching behind her desk to pull out a vodka bottle and a couple of glasses. And the vodka bottle would always be full and unsealed, to be emptied completely (and most likely shattered on someone else's face) in only a few minutes.

You then start to pull out the drawers, one by one. Unless there was some sort of bullshit secret compartment on this huge thing, logic dictates that one of them would have the secret booze. But which one...?

All of them come up empty, save for the last one - and it's with a grin that you realize just how lucky you are that you have someone like Mami in your life.

There, at the very last drawer, is a bottle of unopened Kong, a clean glass, and a new pair of your glasses. Taped to the bottle is a post-it note, with Mami's careful, neat handwriting.

It's signed with a cute caricature of her winking face, complete with sparkles and curls.

You shake your head here, the smile still on your lips. Mami always seemed to know what you needed - immediately - and made sure you got it in the most effective and appreciative way possible.

Taking out the glasses and the booze - putting on the former and pouring yourself a double with the latter - it's here that you look at the emblems a bit more carefully.

The second, titled SCARRED GENOCIDER, is a rather simple visualization of your Shield, with a stylized red scar over it.

The third, titled The Blessed Lady, is a twintailed magical girl in pink, hands clasped in prayer, with golden wings spread out behind her.

The fourth, titled The Flower of Flesh and Blood, is a thorny blue rose blooming over a black baseball bat wrapped in golden thorns, and surrounded by motes of crimson.

...Well. Whoever drew these definitely had talent. Talent, and a whole lot of inspiration.

'Pick one and notify me ASAP.' It's signed by the number 9. Kyuubey. Of course.

[]Shooter.
[]Scarred Genocider.
[]The Blessed Lady.
[]The Flower of Flesh and Blood.
[]Blood and Blue Roses.
[]Leave this aside for now. You'd like to ask Midori and the rest about it first.

It makes us look like we're towing the line while open expressing our actual affiliations. Not to mention serving as a reminder as to why we're here.

Church of Madoka; Not Cult of Faust.

You decide to adopt the Shooter emblem as your own personal heraldry. It's a simple enough design, not as busy as the rest, but definitely very striking. You like how the star's artfully shattered, and it's in one of your favorite colors, too.

The third one, though. While you've no doubt that it would've pleased a certain someone skulking inside your Shield, it'd probably be better in the long run to not be too associated with Pinky outright.

It's here that you blink. Something...seems off with the Blessed Lady emblem, somehow. As if it suddenly...

...NO. No, of course not. That's crazy. It's a fucking printout.

Christ, you're just tired. AND you're drinking. Of course you're going to see things.

You shake your head, and make to contact Kyuubey to inform him of your decision. Your smartphone in your right hand and a drink in your other.

This is going to be a long day.

Sayaka would've told Murderface to make her own damn mind.

Kyoko would've picked the coolest one in her opinion (Scarred Genocider, plus Red's her favorite color, and she thinks it's like both of you are super best friends now with that emblem)

Mami would've abstained, leaving it up to you.

I don't think it matters. Pinky is going to get mad at us. Period.

There's no way that the moralfag faction of this quest isn't eventually going to be forced to directly oppose her.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 03/29/14(Sat)08:52 No.31135554

You are a Magical Girl, and you're on your way to one of two ceremonies that need your attendance as Warmaster of the Ninth Officio.

The first is a certification ceremony for a Vindicare squad freshly minted from the rigorous one-year advanced training course; the other a solemn proceeding to mark the passing of fellow magical girls, aptly named the Remembrance Ceremony.

This is, of course, after two glasses of Kong Whisky - chased by a handful of strong mints to get rid of the tell-tale scent of liquor tainting your breath - as well as calling up your Incubator and telling him of your choice of personal heraldry. And the mutant bastard cat was actually surprised that you replied so soon, just after sending Enishi to remind you - he'd expected your response to take a week at least.

You didn't reply to that, of course, or offer a reaction. The both of you knowing full well what this meant.

Your transformation from negligent, drunkard and unreliable rank-and-file Vindicare to negligent, drunkard and somewhat-reliable watch-wearing dildo is now complete.

It took a surprising amount of self-restraint for you not to trash your office in a blind rage at the realization of it. It took you considerably more not to drain the entire bottle of Kong.

>>31135554

Anyway. You're out of your office, you have your symbol of office - the Warmaster hat - firmly secured on top of your head. Your Desert Eagle strapped to your side via a shoulder holster, and the bangles secured around your wrists, underneath your costume's sleeves. More or less you're set to look like the part Kyuubey chose for you. Or Mami chose for you. You're not sure which of them did, to be honest - but you know you didn't ask for this.

You have a bit of time to drag someone you know from whatever they're doing and accompany you. For...moral support, or something. It'd be nice to have someone you know with you, this is your first time officiating this kind of thing, after all.

Or you could just power through this alone. Show everyone you're a big girl and everything.

The fact she hates Chiaki loud and out in the open is at least half of why Chiaki likes her.

Yes but we also need to get her to not despis us for how she perceives us still by shpwing we do care about the people who fight alongside us and those who are dead even if we have forgotten them and to stop being such a damned shut in, so dragging her to these ceremonies where probably Kyouko will be whether wheelchair bound or not and Sayaka will help push that along some more hopefully

She can still tell us directly and honestly where we fuck up and we might even rely on her for such since Sayaka still is somewhat tsundere towards us and can't be trusted to be properly impartial but she will be more inclined to agree when we ask her to do something instead of just giving us a Wendy special and walking away

You decide to take Sayaka along with you for the ceremonies. If there's anyone whou could keep you serious during both of them, it'll be your Equerry. You remember her as someone who attended this kind of thing regularly too, even before becoming Eversor Rank Leader - you'd be able to catch hints from her about how to go about these things, hints that Mami didn't have time to give you.

You find your Equerry, predictably, in Kyoko's infirmary floor room, and as you burst in to drag her out - it's here that you take a brief moment to stop and blink. Despite the fact that she'd been on the same mission as you, for the majority of last night and this morning - Sayaka doesn't even look sleepy or tired. In fact, she looks like she'd just punched in for work, after a good night's sleep, a long shower and a hearty breakfast.

...And speaking of breakfast, you've burst in on her feeding it to her temporarily-dismembered better half. The latter grinning and greeting you energetically as you come into view. You return the greeting yourself as you take your hat off, tucking it under your arm.

"For fuck's sake, Murderface," Your blue-haired Equerry snaps at you, one ungloved hand holding what appears to be a spoonful of rice and fried egg to Kyoko's mouth, and the other held underneath said spoon. "Fucking knock next time, I almost made a mess here."

...Yeah. Sorry about that, you apologize.

Sayaka grunts here, shaking her head mildly as Kyoko opens her mouth obediently to give the food airplane permission to land. Even saying 'Aaah' as she does so, like an obedient child.

"What're you doing here, then? Aren't you supposed to be going to that certification ceremony?" The blue-haired Eversor glances up at the dial clock on the room's wall. "That's in fifteen minutes, right? You don't want to be late for that, Murderface, they'll be expecting you."

You know that, yeah. She doesn't need to remind you.

"Yeah, sure." Blueberry smirks here, carefully arranging another spoonful of food. "Because if you're here to challenge Kyoko to another Cripple Joust, then I'm throwing you out on your ass."

"Aw, we can't really do that, though." Kyoko pipes up, slightly crestfallen. "Battlefield ain't level, I'm the only one who counts as a cripple." It's here that she giggles. "Hey, next time someone needs to get their limbs chopped off, you be it, Murderface, okay? I already did my turn!"

Hah. Well. Maybe.

"Fat fucking chance." Sayaka's voice has a cold, forbidding tone to it, but the almost-tender way she's feeding Kyoko now throws that into almost hilarious contradiction. "Even if Murderface gets atomized and the only bits of her we can carry back here are her glasses, there's not going to be any Cripple Jousting. Ever."

"That's what I'm here for," Your blue-haired Equerry smiles. "To kill all fun from the world until there is nothing left but non-fun." It's here that she looks up at you from her seat beside Kyoko's bed. "No, seriously, Murderface. What're you here for?"

How do you respond?

You don't see the point of beating around the bush, here, so you'll just come out and say it: you're here to drag Sayaka from this picture-perfect, husband-and-wife scene to accompany you to these damned ceremonies. Not that you really want to break up the said scene, and all.

At this, you get a sight of just how different the couple are, and at the same time how perfect they are for each other. Both of them immediately go red at the exact same time as a reaction - but where Sayaka's is spiced with a deepening scowl, Kyoko's is lightened with a bashful grin and an embarrassed laugh.

"...Well, at least you're honest about it." Sayaka says finally after a few moments, her obviously displeased scowl softening somewhat. It's here that she takes the plate of food from her lap and places it on Kyoko's own. "I want you to finish this, alright? Follow everything the nurses say. I don't want to hear about you not taking your medicine because it's bitter. Only kids do that."

"Yeah, yeah." Kyoko shakes her head. "Alright, already, I get it! I'm not a kid anymore!" It's here that her voice drops to a murmur. "An' you're embarrassin' me in front of Murderface!"

Sayaka glances at you for the briefest of moments, before turning back to the red-haired Eversor. "So? It's only Murderface. You have to heal up properly, alright? No more of that Maximum nonsense until you're cleared for active duty again."

It's...it's 'only' Murderface?

Fine, Sayaka's said a lot of uncharitable things about you in the past - and within earshot, too - but that sounded as if you didn't matter at all. It hurt just as much as 'watch-wearing dildo'.

"...Yeah, okay." Kyoko murmurs, looking down and starting on her breakfast. You see Sayaka smile here, before leaning forward and placing a kiss on her partner's cheek. It's here, too, that you catch her whispering something into the Eversor's ear, one that makes Kyoko go as red as...well, her own hair.

"Let's go," Your Equerry suddenly announces, pulling her cape off of the back of her chair and clipping the collar around her neck with a couple of clear, metallic snaps. She steps past you, quick and agile, and it takes you a moment to catch up.

"Sorry about the delay, needed to square things away before leaving." Sayaka pulls her gloves back on with smooth, practiced movements, the gestures almost hypnotizing in their efficiency. "We've got eight minutes to get there. We'll probably make it with two minutes to spare." She looks back at you with a quizzical look. "Honestly, I thought you had this in the bag, Warmaster." She makes a meal out of the title, almost snarling it, but in a rather playful way.

How do you react?

You ignore the proferred bait, ducking underneath it to go right for her jugular instead.

"When are you getting married?" You ask, deadpan. "Housewife thing suits you. Better than being a bitch, at least."

"...Pushing it, Murderface," Sayaka replies after a slight pause - the pause itself, along with the slightly chilly tone in her voice, already telling you that you've drawn blood. "But if you have to know, not for a while yet. We're making plans, but not until some stuff are squared away." You continue to struggle to keep up with her long, energetic strides. Fucking Eversors. "Need to get everything squared away first before we can do something like that."

Right. You can understand that, despite your limited experience with...the finding a better half to spend the rest of your life with, and everything.

You open your mouth to ask a question, but Sayaka answers before you could actually spit it out.

"Yes, you'll be invited. Against my better judgement, you have to be." The blue-haired Eversor sighs. "Kyoko likes you too much for me to conveniently forget to put you on the invitations list." A pause. "No open bar, though. Certainly no hard liquor, either. Just beer."

"..." Sayaka looks askance at you, before nodding. "That'll do."

The both of you continue to walk towards your destination - and you reach it quickly enough, with two minutes to spare, just like she predicted. It's the Officio's General Assembly Hall, a large conference room used mainly for all-hands meetings, important announcements, and rank-wide gatherings like certification ceremonies. The both of you stop just by the doors, and you could hear the hushed chatter coming from behind them.

[1/2]

"Right. Put your hat on." Sayaka nods as she reaches forward with both hands, straightening your collar, then your bow tie, before patting away imaginary dust and lint from your shoulders. "Relax, but don't look casual. Walk straight, eyes forward. I'll be escorting you down the center aisle - they've set up your throne where the podium should be, and that's where you'll be sitting until the ceremony proper has to begin."

You don your hat as you try to remember - and internalize - the instructions your Equerry is telling you. Suddenly finding your throat dry in...what? Nervousness? Stage fright?

It must have shown on your face, because Sayaka smiles here. Not unkindly. "It's just a certification ceremony, Murderface. Take it easy. You look fine." She reaches up and adjusts your hat. "Just act like your normal self. You can do that, right?"

Yeah. You think so.

"Right." It's here that Sayaka suddenly yawns from behind a gloved hand. "Guh. Can't wait till Kyuubey lets me punch out. Almost falling asleep here."

...Wait. Really? But she looks just like--

"Eversor tricks, idiot." The blue-haired Eversor smirks, before taking her place beside you. "It's easy enough, though, even if you're just a Vindicare. You just have to get good."

Fucking bitch.

"Thank you." Sayaka's smirk grows just the slightest bit, before she shouts towards the general assembly hall itself. "Open the doors! Warmaster's here!"

It's here that the doors begin to open, revealing to you a hall lit by soft amber lighting - and what appears to be the entire Vindicare rank waiting for you. Each one of them standing up in their seats, ready to receive you.

...Christ. You thought this was going to be just a small gathering or something! Not a fucking assembly of more than a thousand Magical Girls!

Hnh. Well, nothing for it.

Suddenly, the hat on top of your head grows warm...

Presumably we will get a new hat with the new heraldry we chose, so this is the lust hats last hurrah.

The question is, what spirit will Pinky put into our new hat. If she knows about the DEagle incarnations and that we have talked to them, it probably won't be as pleasant as lust.

You ignore the strange warmth suddenly emanating from your hat. Whatever's inside it can go fuck itself - you're going to walk under your own power, without being controlled by anything else. You're the one leading this outfit, and not some lust demon from outer space sealed inside a fucking symbol of office - if Pinky was even telling the truth.

It's with a grimace that you started off with your LEFT foot here - but even with that, Sayaka immediately adjusts to synchronize with your movements, seemingly having delayed her own first step to wait for yours. You breath a sigh of relief here, before realizing that she's letting you set the pace, rather than you following hers. Her doing most of the work rather than you.

...Yeah, alright. You get into fights a lot, as Warmaster and Equerry. And even Mami will admit that your relationship with the Blueberry is rocky at best, and homicidal at worst.

But there's no hiding the fact that Sayaka, for all her flaws and general prickliness at having to work with you closely - is actually being a very good Equerry.

Probably better than you actually deserve, too.

You keep in time perfect pace with Sayaka the rest of the way to the front of the assembly hall, where your throne should be. Every carefully-measured step, you acutely feel a thousand pairs of eyes on you, watching your every move, measuring, weighing.

The hat had never felt heavier in all the times you've worn it.

You do your best to ignore it, though - keeping the set expression of silent, grim determination plastered on your face, focusing on nothing else but keeping in time with the Blueberry beside you.

Around the midway point, a voice pops up in your mind, much like Braids' had earlier. And this is somewhat the same voice, yes - but colder. Smoother. Like sharpened ice, but where Sayaka could bruise and prickle, this one cut.

"Poor stride. Poor stance. Poor form. Oh, dear." Dildoes makes a tutting noise in your head. "You're walking on heels, not peasant sandals with manure on the soles. Step lightly. Step with conviction. You look like you're grinding out cigarette stubs, for goodness' sake." She sighs. "And to think you're Warmaster, too. How disgraceful."

How do you respond?

You return the haughty imperiousness of her tone with a snarling one of your own. If she's just going to offer insults rather than suggestions, then you've got no reason to listen to her. If you want to be criticized, then you'll look at the mirror. You don't need to outsource it to anyone else, even if they are actually you.

"...Well, since you asked so POLITELY," Dildo snaps suddenly after what seems like an awkward eternity, "Let me educate you. It's all in the walk. The blue one had the right idea, but that only works for her, since she walks stiff, like she's got a stick up her ass."

Your Golden Desert Eagle grows warm now, but just slightly.

"Do what I say, as I say it, without any questions or hesitation, and we'll get this done. Understand?"

Right.

"Good. Now walk."

And so you do. Under the collective stare of a thousand Vindicares, you continue to stride alongside Sayaka, towards your throne - but instead of simply stiffly plodding along the Eversor, your motions start to change.

Following Dildoes' advice, you step lightly, yet plant your feet into the red carpet with conviction. You keep your strides in a straight line, instead of wobbling all over the place. Shoulders back, chin raised, and with just a tiny bit of sway in your posterior. Both your hands held in two loose fists rather than clenched ones.

"Good. Very good. Eyes narrowed just like that. Don't smile - always be on the verge of a disapproving frown." You could almost imagine Dildoes flitting around you, checking out your every angle obsessively, and snapping out instructions. She seems the person to get particular over the smallest things, anyway.

"And now for the finale." You hear her whisper as you near the throne itself. "The blue one will step aside here. Continue walking, and then when I say so--"

Yeah. You get it. Spin on your heel, and with your right hand--

"Sweep and flick. Yes." Even if it's just her voice you hear, you can tell she's smiling. "Sweep and flick."

And true enough, two steps later - Sayaka breaks away from you, moving to stand by your throne. You do it just like you said you would - a quick spin on your heel clockwise, to face your audience, just as you reach up with your right hand. The soft, silky black length of your ponytail hooks onto your curled fingers, slipping through them - and you flick the entire mass over your shoulder just as you open your momentarily-closed eyes.

The hushed, collective gasp you hear makes it all very nearly worth it. Most of all, Sayaka's surprised, gaping expression.

"How did you--" She starts to hiss, but she's quickly beaten to the punch by the small, bespectacled form of Rea Ashford standing behind a black podium, the girl's lack of height remedied by a wooden box on her feet. Speaking into a microphone, her voice is amplified by speakers on the ceiling, magnifying what should be a quiet, deadpan murmuring into something loud and clear.

"The Vindicare Rank, as assembled here on this day, welcomes and cherishes our beloved Warmaster's participation."

A few claps - merely a scattering at the left part of the hall - but it soon spreads into an almost riotous applause. You merely nod at this, but in actuality you're just lowering your head so the hat's visor conceals your reddened cheeks. Another trick.

"Let us all be seated." Rea says. You take a seat upon your throne - it's a rather comfortable leather-cushioned number, with the Officio's roman numeral designation at the very top, embossed in gold. The rest of the assembled Vindicares follow suit.

"Step forward, members of the Squad Yet To Be Named." The diminutive rank leader intones, and eight Magical Girls stand from the very front row, each one in their full Magical Girl costume. "Step forward to receive full certification from our Warmaster and the name you will answer to until your destruction."

Rea calls them by full names, one by one, names you don't recognize. All of them hopeful, looking at you with fresh faces, full of optimism, but at the same time tempered by the harsh advanced training they've been put through. All of them are anticipating the events to come.

"Warmaster." The Rank Leader nods at you, her glasses glinting in the amber light. "Their squad name, please."

What name do you give this Vindicare Squad? This will be their permanent title, and from here on in, they will be using it to gain achievements for you and the Officio.

You nod at Rea, and it's here that you stand up from your throne, stepping forward - just as the eight members of the Vindicare Squad about to be certified sink down to one knee in a single, unified movement. The butts of their rifles slamming onto the floor in a rippling cadence.

"As Warmaster of the Ninth," You begin to speak, looking at each at them in turn. "I grant certification upon each and every member of this squad. I also bequeath the squad name..." You pause here as you decide upon a handful of squad names you've thought up on your way here. Only one seemed fitting. "...Karyu."

Silence, except for the unified slamming of the assembled squad's rifles into the floor yet again. Acknowledgement, perhaps. Approval, maybe. They haven't started crying yet, anyway.

When the applause finally comes, it's no longer hesitant - it starts as quickly as it engulfs the entire assembly hall in cheers and clapping. You raise a hand here, to signal for quiet.

"...And always remember." You add as the audience manages to quiet down long enough for you to speak. "What truly matters is not the name you are given here today - but what you come to make that name mean in the future." You nod again to the kneeling Vindicares. "Stand, Squad Karyu. Stand and be counted among the rest." A small smile curls your lips. "As Warmaster and also as fellow Vindicare, I congratulate you."

The cheering explodes as the newly-christened Squad Karyu stands up as one, each member seemingly about to cry, or in the middle of doing so, or simply trying to stop. You give them a firm handshake each in turn, giving a few words about their choice of weapon here and there, and telling them that you'll be looking forward to hearing their legend someday. One of them returns your handshake with a hug - and Sayaka had to stop clapping beside you to carefully pry you out of her grasp.

Yeah. It wasn't that bad. ...And she should get off your case, that was the best you could come up with that fit the theme you're familiar with.

"No, no, I'm not actually being sarcastic this time." Sayaka grins. "It was good. I mean - well - not as good as it could've been, but it was good." She nods. "I was dreading about you naming them something like Squad GodBarrel or KillBison, one of those double-barreled names - but Karyu works fine."

Huh. Well. Those....those are actually good names, maybe you can ask Ashford for a takeback--

"No. No takebacks."

I'd guess there's physical training, but different from the regimen of an Eversor. It's more about carrying a lot of equipment easily than outright strength. (Chiaki's arms really _aren't_ as noodly as they look)

Significantly more weapon identification, handling and maintainence.

Not that much of it matters because I get the impression that Chiaki didn't go to a lot of it, and I'd guess that Mami largely let her skip out on it because even if she couldn't remember her name, she could strip, clean and reassemble more firearms than several more senior vindicare.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 03/31/14(Mon)07:35 No.31178338

"Next one's the Remembrance Ceremony, right?" Sayaka murmurs as she pulls out a smartphone from the inside of her cape, swiping a glove-encased thumb at its screen. "You remember where that is, right?"

You do so, letting your Equerry take the lead a few steps in front, her pristine white cape billowing out behind her. ...You have to admit, while you think capes are generally for dildos, Sayaka does pull it off well. Probably one of the really few people who could. Kinda makes you understand - somewhat - how Braids suddenly developed a taste for Blueberries.

...Hah, no. You're never going to understand that.

"How's it going so far, then?" Sayaka suddenly asks, still looking down on her smartphone as the two of you step through a particularly crowded corridor. Magical Girls and employees sidestepping both you and Sayaka as you step past, some saluting, some bowing, all of them murmuring 'Rank Leader' and "Warmaster' in the same hushed breath.

How's what going so far? You growl, pulling your hat down a bit more to hide your eyes. ...Christ, you're never going to get used to the whole 'being saluted to' thing, are you?

"Being a watch-wearing dild--er, Warmaster?" She looks back at you, a small smirk curling her lips, before turning back to face forward.

What the hell is this, then? Sayaka actually making small talk with you?

Ah. Right.

How do you respond?

Chiaki's had more and more responsibility dumped on her plate. I bet she doesn't really feel particularly pleased in having to choose who lives and who dies with regards to Oriko and Midori and so on. She could easily avoid the blame and guilt because someone else was giving the orders.

Now she's where the buck stops. Given Girl A's former killitudinous and Chiaki's newfound sense of responsibility, it's probably horrible for her. She still needs to get it done, but, ugh.

Nothing hypocritical about that

"Is that right?" Despite your talking to the back of her head, you can tell that the smirk on her face is getting bigger. "Sorry, Murderface, I'll have to call bullshit on that."

You let out a short bark of a laugh, before shaking your head. Fine. It hasn't been alright. It's been horrible. You have no idea how Kharn gets through this everyday.

You've become the watch-wearing dildo, you tell your Equerry, only half-joking. You've become that which you hate, and you know it. It hurts. It hurts deep inside.

"Well, don't go crying to me about it like Nobita-kun," The blue-haired Eversor says as you follow her through another maze of corridors, passing by more staff and Magical Girls. One of them, a pink-haired girl with a schoolgirl-themed outfit, squeals at your direction and snaps a photo of you with her outheld smartphone - only for one of her companions to pull her back, chastising her fiercely in hushed whispers. "But I'm not gonna say I don't understand where you're coming from, nor am I going to hop down your throat for you being so fucking ungrateful for a position that Mami and the mutant cat bastard chose you for."

...Yeah?

"Yeah." Sayaka shrugs. "I thought getting to Rank Leader would solve all my problems, cut my workload in half." She shakes her head. "It didn't. I have to take care of an entire fucking RANK, Murderface. Gotta organize specialization and training programs, weapon checks, daily maintenance - as well as weekly mental and physical health checkups for every card-carrying Eversor, to make sure no one's going crazy or about to Witch Out all of a sudden."

Your Eversor lets out a sigh. "I thought it was just going to be a snazzy title and a move up in my pay grade, really, along with some other nice perks. Turns out it wasn't." A laugh. "Kirika actually made it look easy, or at least she did until she had to be retired."

>>31178783

Why doesn't she just delegate it then?

"Probably won't. If Kirika could do it while being...well, Kirika, then it shouldn't be a problem for me." She shrugs again. "Of course, the bitch never had to be an Equerry to the world's worst Warmaster along with being a rank leader, so maybe I'm thinking along those lines too, if it comes to the point that I can't handle it."

...Ah. Hnh.

Is being your Equerry a hassle for her, then?

Sayaka makes a small, condescending noise here, a grunt that sounds suspiciously dismissive. "I'll turn that back to you first, Murderface. Do you think I'm being a good Equerry to you?"

Seems like your Equerry's asking for a spot performance check. A bit sudden, but it's just like her to ask.

How do you respond?

[]Nothing personal, but you actually suck. Then again, I'm not exactly good at my job, either.
[]No complaints. Maybe being a bit less of a bitch would be nice.

She's kept you from making bad decisions, you tell Sayaka. Not to mention that the people you care about are still alive. So...yes, you think she's not doing that bad a job so far.

Of course, you could say that she's doing a good job at it. Certainly not to the same standard that Malal set, but like that's any fair to judge anyone by. Then again, you don't want the hard-earned approval and praise of the 'worst warmaster ever' going to her head.

Sakaya chuckles here again, and the tiniest note of relief in her voice surprises you. "Hah. Well, I'll make sure to keep myself firmly grounded in reality, thank you. And yes, I accept that I'll never be able to be even a quarter of the Equerry Malal was - but then again, who could?" She shakes her head. "I'll just try my best and see if it works. If it doesn't, tell me right away, and I'll make sure to correct whatever it is. If it still can't, then..." She shrugs here.

Then...what? You press, already annoyed at this habit of hers.

"I'll submit my resignation, of course, and recommend Kyoko to take my place as Equerry." The blue-haired Eversor says simply, offhandedly. Making you blink in yet more surprise.

Kyoko? Why her?

Another shrug from her cape-enshrouded shoulders. "Because the both of you get along so much better? Seriously, it's like you're twins, somehow. Two idiots in a pod."

"Sayaka." You say her name flatly, pointedly, much like she said yours earlier.

"Yeah, yeah." Sayaka tosses her smartphone from hand to gloved hand, seemingly trying to keep herself from getting idle. "Because Malal had her slated to be her replacement, in case anything happened."

...A replacement?

Sayaka nods. "Yeah. Kyuubey actually had her go through a week-long training with her and the rest of the Culexus that one time. Don't really know what they did, but Kyoko seemed to really be excited about it when she got back from it."

Another shrug. "Of course, the Betrayer didn't like the idea. Moreso when Malal kicked back during Walpurgisnacht - but I wouldn't have let her myself, even then." She shakes her head. "Kharn never got back into the right frame of mind to lead, even after she got better."

Silence, here. Somewhat an uneasy one, but it feels like you can ask a few questions.

[]Ask about Walpurgisnacht. Ask how Malal died.
[]Would you want Kyoko to be Equerry instead?
[]Don't ask anything. Let the silence continue the rest of the way.

"Really?" Sayaka turns to look at you again, the smirk gone from her face, replaced by a tight-lipped frown to match her narrowed eyes. "Murderface, we're going to a ceremony that honors the dead, the retired, and the miserable bastards who witched out before they could get help. And you want to ask about that? About Walpurgisnacht?"

...You just wanted to ask.

"I know. Just..." Sayaka shakes her head, sighing. "Yeah. It's way too morbid, considering where we're going, but I guess it needed to be asked." It's here that she falls silent, as if collecting her thoughts, before speaking again.

And what she tells you is...just what you expected. All the active Officios at the time - or at least, those who cared - had, in a rare moment of camaraderie, pooled their resources to try and combat Walpurgisnacht as the preordained date grew nearer and nearer.

Prognosticators, data analysts, shamans, soul talkers, and Culexus all burned through hundreds of Grief Seeds to try and divine just where Walpurgisnacht would strike, the path it would take getting there, and any weaknesses it may have. Most of them died in the process. Others witched out, unable to endure whatever horror had been revealed to them during their meditation. They were, at least, the lucky ones.

The answers they finally managed to get were...conflicting, at least. Each group divined at least a dozen different locations where Walpurgisnacht would spawn from. More lives were sacrificed to bring it down to eight. Then, to five.

With the countdown ticking closer and closer, the Officios scrambled to cover all of the locations - opting to destroy Walpurgisnacht before it could fully manifest to full power. It would be at the most vulnerable as it's ripping its way into reality from its barrier cocoon.

Squads from different Officios linked up with each other, some cherished comrades, others hated enemies, but everyone found cause enough to set aside bad blood and relationships aside to fight as one.
Even the Thirteenth, new and fresh under the leadership of Madaraki, sent their own support.

When the deadline finally ticked over - bedlam happened. All five locations gave birth to a grief-crazed abomination, witches that defied categorization - each one stronger and more powerful than the strongest one ever categorized. A fiery giant wielding a terrible spear, upon a hellish, demonic steed. An armored behemoth from the depths, both clawed hands gripping swords the size of skyscrapers. Another, a monster with brilliant amber tentacles sprouting from either side of its oblong head. A towering black mass that clawed at the sky, tendrils of shadow and hate rippling from its skirt. A demonic sun with fangs instead of teeth, and all-consuming despair instead of light.

But none of them were Walpurgisnacht. Even as they killed hundreds of Magical Girls and created untold devastation to the parts of the world they spawned on - they were not the amalgamation of Witches that promised to end the world in a gleeful laugh.

It was then that the sixth location was discovered. In the midst of all the carnage and death, Walpurgisnacht came to being in the cold wastes of Siberia.

And either by sheer coincidence, or planning, or even dumb luck - a unified contingent of the Second's Black Templar division and the Ninth's remaining Culexus were there to meet it.

"Of course, they killed it," Sayaka finishes. "Killed what was left of our Culexus down to just Omegon, and to a handful of the Second's Templars. The Witches that came before it also disappeared the moment Walpurgisnacht went down." She shakes her head, wincing. "Christ, I hope the next one isn't as bad as that. It was just...I wouldn't wish it on you, or anyone else."

Huh. So she was there?

Your Equerry nods. "Kyoko and I were with the Sixth, along with ten Eversor teams. We were in the third potential spawning point - some backwater spot in Australia. The Witch that manifested there was the one on the giant horse with the spear."

How did that end, then?

"Kyoko and I were about to beat the Sixth Warmaster into killing it, until it vanished." There's a note of pride in the Eversor's voice. "They were pretty good sports about it, but her Equerry was roaring mad. Would've probably challenged her into a duel then, if not for the fact that we were asked to support the other spawning point teams."

Support them? For what? Wasn't the fighting over then?

"Search and rescue, Murderface." Sayaka's voice is flat, now. Patient, but tired. "You know. Get the dying to evac, get the dead buried."

Ah.

"We're here," She says suddenly, even before you could respond - and it's here that you see the double doors in front of you, a sign carved in marble placed above them. "Hat off, Murderface. This is kind of a solemn place."

The Hall of Anamnesis, it read.

You take your hat off just as Sayaka pushes the doors open. "As for Malal dying, well...she was one of the Culexus that died in that sixth site. But if you're really curious about it, you know who to ask."

Omegon?

"Yeah. Just be gentle when you ask. I don't think she's over it yet, even after all this time."

The huge double doors, made of heavy black teak, creaks open - and you see another hall lying before you. Not as big as the general assembly one, certainly, but enough room for a sizeable audience, with rows of wooden pews instead of seats. The smell of incense is thicker inside, but not overpowering. Lending the hall a sort of serene calm, combined with the almost impenetrable silence within.

It's also here that you see that the walls are covered in pictures.

Each one encased in a black frame, with black ribbon draped over the two upper corners. And each picture of a different young woman, some smiling, some frowning, others looking like they're being photographed for their driver's license.

...Burial photos. Hundreds of them. Enough to cover an entire wall, from ceiling to floor.

"...Always makes me cold whenever I step in here," Sayaka murmurs. "Seems like we're ahead of schedule, though. No one's here yet, but then again, only a few people really attend this kind of thing."

Really? Then why--

"Because it's important." Sayaka murmurs. "Even if just one of them shows up, Murderface, it's important that somebody's here to talk to them. To tell them that the people who just died mattered."

...

"I know, I know." Your Equerry pats your shoulder. "This isn't even remotely what you should be doing. But it's what you have to do." She shrugs. "What you want to do and what you have to do are sometimes very different things - but that's what duty is all about."

Nnh. Right.

"Look around if you want. We've probably got a few minutes till the ceremony starts."

Seems that you can explore a bit, then.

It's here that you decide to give the wall of burial pictures a look. See if you could spot a familiar face in the hundreds of smiling and frowning dead.

...Shit, some of them are so high up you can't get a proper look. How do you get up there? Is there some sort of ladder you can use?

"A ladder?" Sayaka echoes beside you, her voice barely louder than a whisper. "Nah, no need for one here. We have this all automated." It's here that she reaches out with a hand, as if to touch one of the portraits - and a thin wall of light suddenly materializes in between her fingertips and the portraits themselves. Rippling at the points of contact.

"It's a huge touchscreen we have installed in front of the portraits." Sayaka explains as you stare in awe. "Touchscreen's then connected to the database that gets updated whenever...well, you know. For easy browsing and such."

Another tap of her fingertips, and the screen ripples again" - before going completely white, concealing the framed portraits from view. Then, one by one, the portraits themselves start to fill the screen - materializing from the left and arranging themselves in a neat line running the length of the screen itself.

"I'll set this on auto scroll." The blue-haired Eversor murmurs. "Just tell me when you recognize someone. I'll stop and pull up their portrait, along with their obituary."

You nod here, before murmuring your thanks in return.

"Don't thank me yet." There's something strange in your Equerry's voice. "Alright, let's start. Remember, just tell me."

It's here that the screen begins to scroll, displaying portrait after portrait, each one magnified to take up nearly half of the screen as they are selected. While not every one of them were smiling, they were...well, alive then, at the time. Full of life, and hopes, and dreams, even with the contract they've willingly signed themselves. A frozen moment of their past without a future to connect to.

After a few moments, you ask Sayaka to stop.

"Recognize anyone, then? We've still got halfway to go"

You shake your head. No. It's...that's the reason. You don't recognize anyone.

You feel you should, somehow. You feel you should remember at least one of them. But...no one. You don't recognize anyone. Not even the slightest.

Sayaka's silent for a moment here, before she slashes her fingertips across the queue of portraits. In quick succession, she picks out five among the rest - and you remember these as some of the first ones that you saw when the screen started to scroll.

"Suzumiya Kaoru. Eversor. KIA." A smiling, brown-haired Magical Girl with ribbons in her hair fills the screen. "She saved you from a Charlie-Class Witch when you got sent in along with her during your reorientation. Died from her injuries - the Venenum couldn't get to her fast enough."

Another portrait, this time of a cold-eyed platinum blonde girl with sharp purple eyes and a perennial frown. "Busujima Tokiko. Vindicare. KIA. The both of you were sent for a fire mission, to support another team when some Magical Girls from the Third and Tenth went rogue. The both of you got ambushed. One of them was a Culexus - and she burned Busujima's Soul Gem out while you hid in the next room, unconscious."

She does this to the three other girls. Kuuonji Nanaya. Shiraishi Suwako. Minami Kuroe. All of them worked with you, fought with you, and died trying to protect you.

And you don't remember them at all.

"One of the reasons I...really didn't like you all that well, Murderface." Sayaka murmurs as she finally lets go of the screen, the portraits flying back and rearranging themselves in order. "You always forgot. And you didn't seem to care. You never did."

Funny, you murmur, wiping at your eyes with the back of your hand.

That makes her the only one.

“…Do you love me?” I knew what was coming the moment the words hit the air. …No, I guess I’d say I knew even before then. I knew a long time ago. Weeks. Months. Maybe years. Time seemed to stand still as her lips pursed and a spark of panic emerged in her weary expression.

“…I can’t,” she rasped out, and my heart sunk. A bitter ache filled my chest, and I could feel hot tears burning behind my eyes. “You know that. …Stop asking.” She looked away, trying to hide the own dull throb I knew she felt.

Of course she couldn’t. She didn’t have time for that. There were bigger things at stake, there always were. I wasn’t even sure she COULD love, even if she wanted to. Her heart had been torn out a long time ago. That was part of the deal. Part of why she did all of this. Part of the reason she had come in the first place.

Every time I saw her, I hoped it would be different. But at the same time…she needed to be that way. It was dark and jagged and beautiful, to see that ice-cold look on her face. If she became anything else, it felt like maybe everything she went through would suddenly be meaningless. Like there’d be nothing left of her. Of the girl I fell in love with.

My voice caught in my throat, but it was better that way. Wasn’t like I could say anything to change it. This was how it had to be.

“…I’m sorry,” she continued. She understood how much it hurt, at least. …Every instinct tore at her to leave, like she had before. She was as afraid as she’d ever been. This wasn’t a fight she was used to. …The usual fights were a lot simpler. Kill whatever monster she’d been sent after, then try to get hammered enough to forget.

“…Sempai.” Midori was better than that, though. That was….I never quite understood her. Not sure I even could. But her smile took hold of me, and the cold, drowning sensation left little by little. “No…Not Sempai anymore.”

“Mayumi. Once we finish the Broken Heart Empire once and for all, I’m going to make you my wife.” And all at once, everything was back to normal. Midori’s smile was bright enough to light up the room, and Mayumi’s face found its cold smirk again.

“Then, you’d better start pulling your weight, rookie.”

I snapped the latest volume of Miracle Midori x Murder Mayumi shut, then turned and buried my face in my pillow. My Mayumi doll stared blankly at me for a minute, then we both began to change. It swelled out, tall and imposing, forming itself into the shadow of a familiar figure, and I fell into its arms, pale green hair falling down my shoulders. Our eyes met, and all I could do was let out a soft little noise as our-

“Well THAT ain’t normal.” A familiar twang from the doorway tore my daydream apart, and before I could stop myself, I’d already sent my kitchen knife spiraling toward her. “Dick!” she squeaked, shielding her face with her arms as it shaved off a few white-blonde hairs.

“Fuck off,” I hissed. …Didn’t even hear Annie come in. Sloppy. Or she got a hell of a lot sneakier. …Ugh. She’d caught me at the worst time. Rather she barge in on me in the fucking bathroom.

“Ain’t any need to be rude, now,” she huffed as she invited herself in, plopping her ass down on my bed. “Ya wanted me t’bring my laptop in, r’member. I certainly cannot be held responsible if you’ve forgotten our date in favor of pleasure’s manic caress.”

I glared at her for a few long seconds before I sat down next to her, trying to mumble out that I wasn’t playing with myself or anything.

“Wendy, shug, manifestin’ some ghost version of yer waifu ta diddle ya-“

I wasn’t doing that either. …I could feel Mayumi shudder in my arms, and I set the doll back down next to my pillow.

“So are they bonin’ yet? Has it been fifty volumes, or is that not enough fer shoujo bullcrap t’actually stop?” …Goddammit. She was making fun of me (which was pretty normal), but it was seriously pissing me off already. Just because nobody dies from ghost curses or something doesn’t mean something’s bad.

“Well now, fer a synopsis…” Annie cleared her throat, then started digging her laptop and accessories out of her bag. “’Midori is a sad, lonely, ordinary girl with no talents or personality, then a tsundere drops out of the sky, falls in love with her for no discernable reason, and completely changes her life forever.’ ‘Zat about right? Should I keep goin’? Can I get inta the part where it’s somebody’s lesbian rape fantasy?”

“…It’s more than that. …You have to actually read it.” She was right, and it pissed me off. Annie liked to pretend she read a lot of manga, and that it made her some kind of fucking expert. She wasn’t. She just had shitty taste.

“I read the first couple volumes when it came out. Didn’t do nothin’ fer me. And yeah, maybe it gets better, but somethin’s got serious problems if ya gotta sit’n go ‘It gets better after ten volumes, really!’ That’s a buncha time to sink into somethin’ that you ain’t enjoyin’.”

…This was a mistake, and what I’d asked her to help me out with was a bigger one. I told her to forget it – growled it out, I guess. And that she should fuck off and let me enjoy my day off.

“…Sorry. I get it, it’s real popular, and yer real into it,” she mumbled, and we both sat quietly while her laptop booted up to some picture of a maid with dog ears. “Lemme know when the OVA comes out, ‘n I’ll give it a try. If it’s any good, I’ll try readin’ it again.”

"I heard somethin' t'that effect, too. MGAR did a thing on it a while back, citin' some suspiciously familiar details. Crazy shit." She thrust her computer into my lap with the browser and a text file open. …People always gave me weird looks when I told them I didn't have a PC, but it didn't really do anything my phone didn't.

Green Green's email address was saved in my phone, but I triple-checked it just to be sure. I hadn't told anyone but Annie about it – and I never, ever fucking would – but I'd decided to write a fan letter. She was supposed to be really nice, if you could get ahold of her. "…Y'oughta start with a real introduction. She already knows yer a fan, what she doesn't know is why, or how. Tell her a little bit about y'self. 'I'm an American magical girl in Santa Destroy, and your manga fills my dark soul with light.'"

Kill yourself.

"I'm not the one writin' a sex letter to a porn author. Say, that doesn't look like your work email…" She smirked, and I stared over at her, doing my best to hate her into an aneurysm. Long as one of us got one, I figured I'd win. …No such luck.

"DreamyGrrl88~ That's so cute~" I ignored her this time. …Wanted to get this done before…before I lost my nerve.

She sent it for me, in the end. Jammed the enter key while I was thinking about deleting it. Couldn't get a day off without some pushy blonde bitch trying to monopolize it.

…Really miss it. Her and Mary, and Nico just fucking…stealing me for a day to eat pizza and play games, or mess around, or whatever.

I sat alone in my hotel room, staring at the same email field. DreamyGrrl to GreenGreenMagica. We'd exchanged emails a couple of times – I got the feeling she did that with all of her fans, when she could find the time. It'd been a few months since I'd had time, but shit, magical girls die all the time. She'd probably already forgotten about me.

…Almost wished Nakajima would come in and cuddle up or something. Or Jade, but she wasn't the type as much. It was lonely, stiflingly lonely. The Church's Prognosticators reported in already, said Matsuda came out of her scrap with the Sixteenth more or less in the pink. I was kinda hoping she'd fuck it up, so I'd have some excuse to show up instead of sitting here and waiting for someone to give a shit.

Mickey probably kept her on track. Blueberry was a lot of things you wanted in a puella, and Kong…Matsuda was lucky to have her, even if she was kind of a stick in the ass.

…Mayumi stared at me from my nightstand, like she was asking me why I was being such a pussy about this. The fact that she didn't say it was a good sign, at least. I was more than sick of dreams talking to me while I was trying to do other shit lately.

‘It’s been a while, Green, but I didn’t die or anything’. Real smooth. ‘You doing okay? I heard they got some idol bitches for the OVA. I hope they don’t screw it up. You know them at all?’

…Yeah. I could do this.

‘So I’m in Mitakihara on business. My girlfriend broke up with me, and I’m feeling a little-‘ No. That’s just desperate and pathetic.

‘I’m in Mitakihara for work. You wanna get lunch? It’s cool if you don’t, I’m sure-‘ Don’t be a beta pussy, I heard Nico hiss at me. Or maybe it was Mayumi after all.

‘I’m in Mitakihara, but I’m bored as shit. Let’s get lunch.’

…She’d never agree to it. Fuck. I shut the stupid laptop and fell back in bed. I was just hitting on anything and everything now, pretending like it meant something. Fuck’s sake, I woke up next to Nakajima. That was like… fucking your little sister. She’d never agree to it and I wouldn’t put her through that.

I squeezed my eyes shut and tried to get some sleep.

…It was only a few minutes later when I heard someone typing. The room over there was lit up – the laptop was open, with someone sitting at the foot of the bed. I thought for a second it was Nakajima, then a familiar voice hit my ears. One with a sweet, gentle tone that I could barely hear through a hiss of radio static.

We’re in a tight spot, Wendy. It doesn’t take much these days, does it…?

…Pink. A tiny girl with pink hair, at the foot of my bed. She glanced back at me for just a second, then offered a half-smile. It was…a little different than I’d gotten used to. There was a little flash of gold when she looked at me. And…usually, she didn’t smile. Ever.

You need to relax a little, is what I’m getting at. You can go back to sleep, I’m almost done writing it.

“…Writing what?” I mumbled aloud, pulling myself up into a sitting position.

An email.

“Oh. Oh fuck no.” I scrambled for the laptop, but my body felt…heavy. Like it did when fucking Blendermouth was around. It wasn’t responding like it should, and she held the laptop away from me even as I reached her.

Okay, okay.

Her smile turned sheepish, and she pushed the laptop back into my arms – and with one sharp, graceful motion as she withdrew her hands, she punched the enter key.

“…Fuck!” Fuck fuck fuck she’d written a whole bunch of crap about-about losing my girlfriend, and my friends, and how I wanted to meet Green in person fuck fuck FUCK.

Tehe~ Looks like I accidentally sent it anyway. Silly me~

…Pink rapped herself on the side of the head with her knuckles, sticking her tongue out. I wanted to hit her, but I couldn’t quite bring myself to. It was a relief to have someone else do it, but every time one of…them…did something I didn't want them to, I felt like I was slipping just a little bit more. And I couldn't afford to.

Not until I…we…saved Annie. And Nico.

And Murderface.

I labeled it on the pastebin because I forgot to label it in the 4chan thread version - the first part of this takes place around six months before Wendy's death.

Even now she's written Midori off as someone who wished to look like Miracle Midori, or just someone who happens to look like her. Green Green's actual identity is kept fairly well-hidden, after all.

Chiaki, on the other hand, has basic Vindicare skills, friends willing to fight for her, a near-infinite storage armory in the Shield, access to the accumulated skills and magical techniques of thousands of timelines, and a few Time Stops a day.

I think it is in a roundabout way Midori's fault. She's the intruder, in a technical sense; it was never planned that she survives. She was supposed to get pasted by Chiaki. So all the things you see uneccesarily nserted into, where you think only MAI ANGEL Midorin belongs, were actually planned out to be Wendy's spots, so now it looks like those spots are doubly occupied. What you're seeing is not forcing the character, it's just the way it already was, you're only now finding out about it.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 04/06/14(Sun)07:59 No.31295879

"You going to be alright, Murderface?" Sayaka asks you as she returns, your Equerry having left you on your own for a while. You took this time alone to read up more on the people you've forgotten - those that you didn't even credit with a half-remembered memory, even when you can remember others that never really deserved to be.

Almost all of them had been a few years into their service in the Ninth Officio - and in the world of Magical Girls, that was enough to consider someone as a battle-hardened veteran, simply by dint of having survived that long.

But they weren't particularly special - no peerless battle records with high body counts, or noted feats of bravery or courage. A few typical merits here and there, with Suzumiya Kaoru also having impressed Kharn a few times in sparring. But nothing spectacular. Nothing that made them rise above the hundred other Magical Girls wearing the Ninth's symbol.

>>31295879

Nothing, except for their last attempts at...what? Doing the right thing? Or the wrong thing, considering that they saved someone like you - someone who couldn't even credit them with a memory?

You have no answer to that, except to write down their names, with respect and car, into the inside of your journal's cover. Five names that you shouldn't forget. Five reasons why you're still here, instead of...well, dead.

Five lives in exchange for yours.

That was the thing with Magical Girls, you guess. No matter how much they learn, they always got the worst end of the deal.

"Murderface?" Sayaka asks again, with a politeness and gentleness that you never even expected with the usually-abrasive Eversor. "Do you want me to take over instead? You can just take a seat at the back and let me conduct the ceremony, if you don't feel like it."

How do you respond?

[]It's fine. I can do it.

You shake your head. Sayaka's kind to offer, but you can do the ceremony yourself. Everyone has to start somewhere, after all - and there no better time and place than in a Remembrance ceremony.

Sayaka nods here after a moment's silence, both relief and uncertainty warring in the brief smile that curls her lips. "...Well, alright, Murderface. We'll start in a few minutes." Another moment's hesitation, before she continues. "Actually, let's hold it together, at least for this time, so you know how it goes. That okay with you?"

Yeah, of course it's okay. You were going to ask her to coach you, anyway. Less risk of embarrassing yourself and ruining the solemnity of the occassion, too.

Your Equerry nods again. "Thanks. It's...not that I don't trust you or anything, Murderface, but this kind of thing is important. For me and for everyone who attends." She gazes out to the sparsely-populated pews, a few Magical Girls having stepped into the hall and taken seats during your reminiscing.

"It's not just a salve for those left behind, you know. It's about everyone being remembered in some way after they're gone, a reassurance that they wouldn't be forgotten."

You nod. Yeah, that makes sense. Also makes sense that Sayaka's always been a massive bitch to you, now that you know the reason why. ...Is she going to stop being a bitch after this, though, now that you've found out? Can you expect morning cuddles and bed in breakfast?

The sharp elbow in your ribs makes you wince, but the chuckle coming from your Eversor manages to lift the heavy mood just a bit. "You have Midori for that, asshole. And no, I'm still going to be a bitch to you no matter what. I have my reputation to look out for, you know."

Hah.

You glance back at the pews. A few more Magical Girls had added to the small congregation at the back - a few of them moving to the front - but there's still a whole lot of room to fill. A stark contrast to the certification ceremony earlier.

Shouldn't you wait until there are more people, then?

"I told you, this is normal." Sayaka shakes her head. "Sometimes a handful more comes in during the middle, but otherwise this is the usual amount I'd expect."

...Huh. Well. That's...

"I know. And I did say this is important." Your Equerry lets out a sigh. "But at the same time, a lot of our girls don't really like being...reminded." She smiles again, a small sad one. "They want to remember their friends, they want to be remembered, but at the same time they don't want to be reminded of what could happen to them." Her shoulders lift in a shrug. "'Course, I can understand that. But at the same time, it's healthy to accept it too. Be at peace with it and everything."

You can understand that, too.

A bit pragmatic of her, though.

"Everyone dies, Murderface." Sayaka says, as she leads you to the hall's pulpit. "That's just what happens, moreso in our line of work. There's no shame in it."

And with that, the ceremony started. With barely a quarter of the pews filled, Sayaka formally opened the proceedings by asking those present to stand and to start praying - in whatever faith they believed in - for those that have been lost. For those they mourned for.

"It's not just the Blessed Lady they pray to," Sayaka murmurs to you in soft, hushed tones. "Lots of girls grow up with other religions, and still keep them even after they contract. Most of them start praying to the Blessed Lady exclusively, though."

Hnh. That's something to remember, then.

Second came the reading of the names. Wordlessly, Sayaka opened a large, leatherbound book at its most recent page, and pointed at the name at the very top of the list. "Read each one slowly. Don't speed through it, either - give a few seconds before reading the next in the list. I usually take a breath after each name, that's enough of a gap."

Keeping her instructions in mind, you do so. There were fifteen names, all in all. Names you've never heard, but as you gave each name voice, as you heard yourself say them - you feel emptier with every one. As if each death drained you just by knowing who they were, instead of just being a number. A statistic.

More painful to hear was the reaction from those present when you read out some of those names. One of the girls sitting in the front started to sob as you did so - bending over almost double in her seat as she tried mightily to muffle her crying into silence, her small form shaking violently. This was repeated again by another at the back, but at least this one had two other friends with her to console her, to help her from making a scene.

As you said the last name on the list, you feel the most tired you've ever felt in a long time. Not the actual fatigue of stressed muscles and breath-starved lungs, but the sort of weariness inside that you were more familiar with than anything else. The sort that made you languish in your apartment and start up a collection of empty Kong bottles. Daring yourself to see if you could muster enough guts to shoot out your Soul Gem yourself.

Yeah? What happens here, then?

"Well, the person holding the ceremony usually says something." Sayaka glances back towards the congregation. "Just a short speech to help people with their loss, what they're feeling right now. To help them remember that they people they lost died for something." She turns back to you. "It doesn't have to be something brilliant or inspiring, just...something to help them deal with the pain, see it in another light."

...Right. That's...that sounds tough.

"Yeah, I know." It's here that Sayaka smiles. "Want me to do it, or do you have something in mind?"

How do you respond?

You shake your head again. No, you have...something in mind. You're not guaranteeing that it's anything good, or that everyone who hears it won't be cringing as they do so, but you have something.

"Go ahead." Sayaka nods. "And it's fine. Just...I guess if you mean what you say, it'll be alright."

You nod here, before turning back towards the congregation, finding your throat suddenly dry. Fuck. Shooting people from afar, fine. Shooting people in the face at point blank range, sure. But public speaking? ...Nothing you've ever been trained to do. Nothing you're prepared for.

But you try to make a go for it, anyway. If you fuck up, well, at least people can't say you didn't try.

You take a deep breath. And another.

At your third, you start to speak. Talking directly to your audience, to the meager but hopeful congregation assembled to hear you.

"It's easy to forget the dead."

Your first words, and already Sayaka was showing the beginnings of a cringing scowl. Even the girls that had been taken by emotion earlier had stopped, looking up at you blearily, as if unbelieving of what you'd just said. But you forge on, ignoring them, ignoring the cold sweat breaking out on your back.

"It's easy to forget who the dead was before they died. How they lived. What they did before the end. We only remember that they left us. Sometimes that's all we focus on. We remember that they were taken from us, not what they meant to us when they still lived." You look down at your hands on the pulpit, before looking back up. "I'm...still trying to learn how to do that, myself."

You take a breath here, before continuing. "It hurts to lose someone. It hurts even more when they're dead and forgotten. But I think it hurts worse when all they're remembered by is their death - the logical end of all things that live and breathe and love. Rather than the lives they led and the battles they fought."

Another breath. "I...I guess what I'm trying to say is we should remember. Remember everyone, not only those we've lost, but those still with us. Still fighting with us and for us. As long as we do, we will never be alone - just as they won't be."

You let your last words trail off in silence, before stepping back awkwardly. You turn to glance at Sayaka, to look at her for approval - and you see her belatedly wiping her eyes with the back of her glove.

"...I know what you're going to say, and I swear it's just some dust that got into my eyes." She murmurs, shaking her head and glaring at you. "That was nicely done, though. Especially the indirect quote at the end."

...Indirect quote?

Huh. That's...well. That's a coincidence.

"Yeah, that's why it's surprising." It's here that Sayaka nods towards the congregation. "They seem to apreciate it, at least."

Yeah. They haven't exactly started walking out on you yet, so you're taking that as a sign.

"They wouldn't, even you fucked it up. But you'd feel that they didn't like it." Your Equerry shrugs. "It's not really some sort of quality thing, anyway. You don't have to impress them. Just...say something that makes sense. That helps them keep in mind that they've still got something to live for, after losing someone."

...And what does she think about it, then? About what you just said.

"It's..." Sayaka takes a moment to respond, here, as if searching her thoughts. "It'll be something I keep in mind just before I go into a berserker rage if someone kills Kyoko, at least."

Ah. Well. You'll take it.

"Good." It's here that the blue-haired Eversor smiles. "I can take it from here, anyway. You can go do more Warmaster-y stuff if you want."

Isn't this Warmaster-y stuff already?

"The more your type of stuff, I mean. But I guess from how seriously you took this one, I'm starting to change my mind about that." It's here that she nudges you. "Go on, then."

Yeah, yeah.

As you make to leave, it's here that you notice Kyuubey sitting in one of the pews, perched there like a common housecat but unnaturally still. You could have mistaken him for a toy, or something.

What's he doing here? Surely a mutant cat doesn't need to go to this sort of thing?

I'd need to have an actual in-character reason to not kill the target of our mission. He's just another politician, just a little bit higher up the chain than most. I'd want a briefing first, but we are literally hired guns. We shouldn't go out of our way to kill others, but when on an assassination mission, you assassinate.

Now, if he hugged puppies, established world peace, eliminated nuclear stockpiles, and flowers sprouted everywhere he walked, then I'd be concerned.

First off, yes, I am American. I also probably have a better grasp on the language than you do. There is nothing in the phrase "assassinate a President" which suggests that it refers to any specific president, and the mind naturally gravitates towards the most obvious one. It is a likely way of phrasing it too: "let's go kill ourselves a President".

You are making mountains out of molehills simply so you can have a laugh at those "dumb hick Americans", immediately antagonizing them for no good reason whatsoever.

You make your way towards Kyuubey's pew, taking a seat beside the Incubator. After a few moments of silence, you open your mouth to speak - but he interrupts you even before even the first syllable had left your lips.

"I try to attend these ceremonies whenever I have the chance or when things aren't too busy, Matsuda." The mutant cat replies, still staring ahead. "It used to be just something I did to appear to be more personable and amiable to my contractees, but recent developments had...made it something more of a resonant event for me."

...Well, at least he's honest, you think to yourself. But...recent developments? Is it about you making Warmaster, or something? To check up on you, see if you're not screwing things up too badly?

"While I can see why you'd think that, Matsuda, it is not because of your ascendance to Warmaster." It's here that he finally turns towards you. "Two of my brothers were supposed to have landed here ten years ago. They were to be the youngest of our kind chosen for this task, as well as the ones allotted with the most resources to use for contracts." A moment. "They were also the ones who were supposed to be the best of us. The brightest."

"Their gestation pods burned up during entry to this planet's atmosphere. Some...sort of technical malfunction, or most likely a flaw in their overall construction. We couldn't find enough of the wreckage to piece together an accurate picture." Kyuubey shakes his head. "But we discovered enough to know that they didn't suffer at all. At the very least, I - and the brothers I have who share my sentiment regarding this - draw solace from this."

That's...you're sorry for his loss, then.

"You have no need to apologize, Matsuda. You are not directly responsible for their deaths, nor do I have the need to assign blame. It simply happens. That's all."

Ah. Right. You forgot he was an unfeeling alien at the core. ...Well, not really unfeeling, that's sort of unfair. More like...coldly logical. Yeah.

It's strange to hear him talk like this, though. You're used to him talking in frustration about his brothers.

"They can be difficult to deal with, but they are my brothers. Every loss diminishes us. Every death is a considerable setback to achieving what we set out to do." He pauses here, as if remembering himself. "I'm sorry, Matsuda. You didn't need me to bore you with this. I'm sure you have other things to do."

...No, you're not bored. It's just new to hear him talk like this, just like you said earlier.

"Consider my surprise, too, when you actually managed to speak a few paragraphs' worth of words without cursing or growling for once." There's an amused note in his voice now. "Jesting aside, that was a commendable effort, Matsuda. Kharn never managed holding one Remembrance ceremony during her turbulent career." He nods at you. "If you are truly trying to distance yourself from her shadow, then you've already succeeded."

That's...well. That's good to know.

Geh. You shouldn't be blushing, but you are.

Fucking cat!

"I would like to be alone for a while now, though, Matsuda, if you'll be so kind. Some things require solitude to appreciate properly. Mourning is one of them." It's here that Kyuubey looks up at you. "Shouldn't you be trying to catch that idol show before it ends? I remember you saying something to that effect."

How do you respond?

[]Yeah. I should probably get going.
[]I have something else in mind, but I'll leave you alone.

Homucifer is probably limited in how she can manifest. Or atleast the Homusquad thought it would be outright impossible for her to appear to Chiaki directly.

The scrying scene implied she wants Chiaki(&Homusquad) dead, and she could really screw Chiaki over by appearing to Kyuubi and telling a few secrets so odds are that she cannot.

Pretty sure they're relationship points, since we've been getting those before we even got our lovely Chainaxes. Plus we have been losing a few points along the line for being bad to or disappointing people, so I dunno.

I mean, if they are chainaxes points, they will track relationship points - friends are worth more points, not-so-friends are worth less. But they will also track other things. Plus, we were always going to get the chainaxes, so if I were Decu and wanted to go maximum Butcher, I'd introduce the points first, then the axes and not really say anything.

The higher your relationship, the better the betrayal multiplier.

The only real difference is that chainaxe points also take into account how deadly the MG is to start with.

Yeah. You should probably get going. You're not much into attending the show itself, though - just that you know the person featured in it and you'd like to show your support. You're not into weird things like M-idols or anything like that.

It's here that Kyuubey blinks. "I... I see, Matsuda. Very well, I'll keep it in mind."

You just wanted to make sure he understood your position on this things. So that there's no confusion. You don't like idols, or M-idols, or S-idols. Period.

"I understand perfectly and clearly, Warmaster. There is no confusion here."

Really?

"Yes."

Really?

"Yes."

You narrow your eyes, glaring at Kyuubey, a glare that he easily returns with his usual wide-eyed stare - and it's here that you reach out and give his ears a gentle scritching. He seems even more surprised at the gesture, but he allows it to happen, even leaning into it. You do this for a few moments before deciding that it's going to a strange place, and make yourself stop before it goes any further.

"The rest of the day is yours to spend as you see fit, Matsuda." Your Incubator says finally as you stand up to leave. "Try to rest up, as your official ratification as Warmaster will be in a few days."

...Does that really have to happen? You're already Warmaster, aren't you? Everyone calls you that already. There's no need for something like that--

"It's not just for this Officio, you realize." Kyuubey shakes his head. "It's for the other Officios as well. So that they know who I've chosen to lead, as well as who I'll be sending to reduce their entire roster into a mountain of corpses should I suddenly feel the irrational desire to."

...He really gets a kick out of the insane act, huh?

"It never fails to be amusing, yes." Kyuubey smirks. "Take care on the way to wherever you're going, Matsuda."

But magical girls don't need bandages. So those can't be for injuries.

What kind of freak accident during a mission would result in Chiaki being wrapped all over in what looks like a mummy costume? Was she strongarmed in another idol mission, but this time it wasn't a concert but a haunted house installation and she had to dress as a mummy to blend in with the others? And the bandages kind of got stuck so she couldn't undo them herself and needed Midori?

And with that, you leave Kyuubey in the Hall of Anamnesis, along with Sayaka and the girls you've tried to help through their grief. In your own stilted, awkward way.

It felt...good, you thought.

On the way to the parking lot, though - you having decided to simply take one of the company cars for a spin - it's here that you bump into Mami, who seems to be fresh from a shower. At least she smells like it, the whiff of honey-scented shampoo tickling your nostrils.

"Oh, Chiaki-san! Are you in a hurry to go somewhere? You look like you are!"

Well, kind of, yeah. You're trying to catch the tail end of an idol show. ...One you're not really into, of course.

"Hee. Of course, Chiaki-san. But, hmmm..." Mami seems to think for a bit, before nodding and tossing you what looks like a ring of keys. "Here, catch!"

You blink before doing so, snatching them out of the air with an outward snap of your arm. Keys?

"Take my Hayabusa. It'll get you to where you're going much more quickly, what with the traffic at this time and everything." She taps at her wristwatch, smiling. "Just be careful when driving, and don't forget to wear a helmet, alright?"

...Mami's actually lending you her motorcycle? HER MOTORCYCLE.

"Well, it's an emergency, isn't it?" Your personal blonde goddess of luck and victory smiles again, heartbreakingly beautiful. "And I trust Chiaki-san to come back with it in one piece. At least." It's here that her brow furrows. "Although, please try to get it back here intact, I just had its limiters removed--ah! Chiaki-san!"

You didn't give her time to finish her sentence as you moved to hug her, giving her a warm squeeze and whispering thank you- before letting go and then breaking into a dead run towards the parking lot.

Sometimes you really don't get why Mami's so good to you.

But one thing's for sure, Risa's fear-mongering earlier is just too ridiculous to even believe for one second.

As if Mami could actually betray you. Or hurt you.

he ride to Noriko's M-idol Concert was infuriatingly short and amazingly quick. Thanks to Mami's gold-painted beast of a motorcycle - the Suzuki Hayabusa ripping up the road like nothing else as it roared and growled between your legs - you were able to get there in ten minutes flat, well before the concert itself actually ends. The ticket checker merely grunted as you stepped in, punching your stub and ushering you towards the hall entrance.

It's certainly not the Mitakihara Stadium in size and occupant capacity - it's as big as a slightly-cramped movie theater - but the location is certainly more than what you expected for someone who definitely wasn't a superidol. And Ruri had told you about how M-idols were generally a niche kind of interest, with a very exacting and very unforgiving fanbase.

At the stage itself, you can see Noriko, in what appears to a dress mainly made out of tomato pulp.

...Apparently you missed the bit where they start to pelt the M-idol with fruit. Probably a blessing in disguise, considering you wouldn't have been able to take something like that without firing a gun into the air and yelling that for every tomato thrown, you blow out three pairs of kneecaps.

Anyway. Nuriko's now murmuring something about being really good at card games, but only because she wanted to impress her younger brother. It got to the point that she had to hide cards inside her sleeves to do so - and against children, no less.

"UGH! DISGUSTING! WORST IDOL EVER!"

"SO WHY DID YOU MANA WEAVE?!"

The sheer amount of venom and hatred being flung down towards Noriko would've made anyone else curl up and die - or at least try to take out as many people with her with a vest made out of C4 - but it seems that the youngest female Karasawa is actuall...enjoying it. Sure, she's shivering, and her grip on her mike is clammy and shaky, but you could tell from the glint in her eyes, and those of her audience - they're enjoying it. This back-and-forth. This shitflinging.

...Idols. Fucking idols.

It's here, though, that you spot a familiar blonde sitting on a few rows below you, near the aisle itself. A particular blonde who you tried to interrogate, but just proved herself too plucky - and annoying - for you to intimidate.

It's also here that you notice a pair of tomatoes, unthrown, in a bag beside your seat.

It's not as though it was BAD news getting hired to do one of the leads for a popular series; ordinarily, this would be the sort of thing to make or break a career, or bring an idol of my standing from glorious success to legend. Even so, I could find a hundred reasons why I shouldn't have done this, and it baffled me that Takane-san of all people seemed so enthused about the entire affair.

I'm sure she's a fan of the series, and as is par for the course, simply hasn't told anyone.

The problem that struck me, I suppose, was the implication behind it – I was voicing some kind of lesbian serial rapist based on the woman I fell in love with. Two big, huge strikes against wanting anything to do with that project (though I can only assume anyone sensible would at least object to the first part). Almost worse than that, it was pornography.

Do you know what it means for an idol to go into pornography?

That's what happens when she has nothing else left and the public has forgotten about her. I'm teetering on the edge of a two-dollar discount box somewhere in the red light district. I was positive for a while that the awful little goblin that hung around the studio had already started selling tapes of me on the toilet. At this point it's all but confirmed.

Yes, that about set the tone for my days as of late; the worst part about my time with 2020 Pro had undoubtedly been the ragged, dying breaths of my career. Or, to be more accurate…

"Come on, Iori-chan, are you gonna sit and mope for the whole break?"

…to be more accurate, the exhausting, relentlessly cheery dying breaths of my career. I felt her chest press into my back as she threw her arms around me, and I froze, fighting back the panic. She wasn't going to hurt me, she wasn't going to…do anything. I repeated it to myself over and over – safe. I'm safe. I'm safe.

I wish Chiaki-san were here.

I clutched at my purse, dug my nails into the stiff material. I knew Usagi-san was in there, of course, if I needed him, but I'm seventeen years old. I'm more than capable of keeping a grip without a stuffed animal. I pushed my thoughts away from Ruri, burned everything into anger. It was the easiest way to deal with this. I had often found it was the easiest way to deal with most things.

She did the same thing to everyone else, of course. Everyone loves Ruri, and Ruri loves everyone. Any idol of a certain caliber would do the same. We had all stepped out onto that stage many times before, and each time, every single person in the audience was our boyfriend. Or girlfriend, if you were into that sort of thing.

“Sorry, sorry! I forgot, no touching.” It still took her a moment to let go, as though it mattered to her.

“I’m fine,” I snapped. I didn’t need her pity. I had gotten more than tired of pity in the past few months. It seemed to be all anyone had for me anymore. Well, that and thinly-veiled contempt. But the contempt I could stomach, at least – it was a natural part of being an idol.

…The smile Ruri flashed me was apologetic, uncharacteristically so. It reminded me of Yayoi in a way that made my heart ache. She was…kind, in her own way. Yayoi was kinder, of course. And not nearly so aggressive. Even so, for just a flash, we connected on a level that I realized I desperately craved.

Unfortunately for Ruri, I’m not so naïve.

Even in her smile I could feel it – an ever-present sort of pressure. She needed to own me, along with everyone at 2020, and this was the quickest way to do it. People belonged to Kirishima Ruri; in her mind, that was an inescapable fact. I’ve been told that on some level, that attitude is what sets superidols apart from those of us that end up masturbation fodder. It reminds me more of…’killing intent’, I’ve heard it called. She would make a frightening magical girl.

Just considering it sent a whirlwind of emotions through me. It made me sick, angry, jealous. …A woman of my caliber should have no trouble controlling a room, but every single person here was on Ruri’s leash, and I could feel the same noose tightening around my neck every time we spoke. Despite my better efforts, I was getting used to her.

“Hmmm, you’ve got that pouty princess look again…” The smile wasn’t enough, and a moment later, her eyes were locked on mine. She was already uncomfortably close, but now her eyes were fixed on my mind, pools of aquamarine filling my vision. My eyebrow twitched.

“You can talk to me, y’know. That’s what friends are for!” Her smile made my heart skip a beat again, and that only made me hate her a little bit more.

“Your assistant spit in my drink again.” It wasn’t precisely what I was thinking about, but it was true. I was above petty physical retaliation, of course, but given she’d spit in my drink every day since I’d begun working with 2020, I was very close to making a strangling-related exception.

The only thing stopping me at this point was the dawning realization that she would probably enjoy it.

Was…was she trying to goad me into choking her? Oh my god. Ugh. I hate this place.

“Weeeell, things like that are why I drink bottled water. And canned juice.” A manicured, green nail scratched at her neck. Even that gesture was measured.

“She’s not much of an assistant if she spits in your drinks,” I pointed out, with all the tact I could manage. Really, she was a sort of pathetic assistant to begin with.

“Oh, no, not her. Mappi-chan used to all the time. She learned some secret stage technique from Kyoujou. Spooky metal stuff. It’s like, the biggest, grossest loogie you’ve ever seen. Um, that doesn’t leave this room or anything, the moment anyone finds out we hock loogies or poop or whatever else, the whole industry’ll go down in flames.” For a moment, her smile turned…just a little more honest. Maybe a little bit sheepish. It must have been the expression on my face when she started talking about bodily functions.

“…Well, there are people that are into that, too.” Ruri mumbled it out, as though she’d suddenly realized this was a strange topic to go on about.

“Like Karasawa-san.”

“Like Noriko-chan,” she agreed all-too-readily. Have I mentioned I hate this place? We sat together in silence for a minute before she let out a little ‘oh!’ and pulled two cans of juice from her bag. She pressed one into my hand – orange juice, and the brand I typically preferred. She probably hunted me down just to bring it to me. For a moment, I almost felt bad for thinking ill of her, and her noose tightened a little more.

“…I get it, y’know? You don’t really like this. You want to perform with your friends-No. You’re like me, aren’t you?” I was taken aback for just a moment, but rather than justify it with a response, I set my jaw and opened my juice.

“You’re happier in the spotlight, alone. You’ve got something to prove, right?” …It was rather good, actually. I assumed she just picked one at random, but it was cool and comforting.

“Are you planning on wasting our entire break with this?” My family was the second to last thing I wanted to discuss right now, with the second to last person I wanted to talk to.

Third to last, if you count that little greasetrap.

“Geez, you’re as bad as Mappi-chan. But at least when you’re being sulky you don’t get all weird and German.” She took a long drink of her vegetable juice – it was some brand she’d done a commercial for, they probably paid her to drink it in public – and stretched.

“You two seem to be getting along better today.” A stern voice came out of nowhere, and I nearly spilled my drink. …It was Hatachikawa-san, 2020 Pro’s producer. He was a bit short and broad-shouldered, but he had a presence about him that made him seem much larger – he was still taller than the both of us, anyway. The very picture of a stoic Japanese man, and I’d already started to wonder by the way Ruri instantly deferred to him whether they had something…on the side.

“Mr. P! We’re so late you came to get us? So~rries~” Ruri tittered and pranced to his side, then waved me over, too. I stared down at my can of juice. …Our producer would have waited for me to finish. He was unreliable, but at least he didn’t seem so…

Hatachikawa-san laughed, but it seemed to come out just a little later than it should have. He was forcing himself to seem a bit more approachable for my sake, I'd been told before.

“I was worried – after all Minase-san has been through recently, and with this harsh change of venue…well, as long as you're working with Kirishima-chan, then we would prefer to treat you like one of 2020 Productions' own valued performers. Your well-being and comfort are my utmost concern, Minase-san.” It came out smooth, as if rehearsed, and he smiled coolly. I pulled myself to my feet and flicked my hair over my shoulder.

I was off, then, to suffer through another two hours of voice-destroying growling, disgustingly hammy dialogue, and exaggerated moaning, with only half a can of orange juice and a heart full of spite and fury to run on.

Joy.

PROSE MAGICA

http://pastebin.com/u/Grizzlyniisan

The past few days had been a strange experience for Odette Brighton. She had been stabbed, punched and kissed, nearly witched out and fell in love all within the last forty-eight hours. Now she stood face to face with colleague of dubious seniority, unsure whether or not she should be afraid or happy to see her.

The shrine maiden was at least a head taller than Odette, dressed in traditional Japanese garb with her hair tied back with a gigantic red ribbon. The two locked eyes for moment, sharing a stern look of meaning that only they could discern, before both broke into matching grins and shared a firm, strong handshake that just as quickly turned into a sisterly hug.

"Been long time, Snowflake!"

"So it has, Armpits," the one-eyed girl laughed as they pulled apart. "Holly neglected to tell me you'd be stopping by. I figured you'd be meeting with Terry, not some washed-up loser."

"Tch," Xiaomei muttered, giving a vague look of annoyance. "Sparky dumb like billy goat and even less fun. Besides, Fatty say you finally get over bad case of stupids."

"And you had to come see for yourself."

"Exactly! So how it feel being lowly peasant again?"

"I dunno," Odette shrugged. "I figured I'd at least get rid of you, but it looks like I'm not so lucky, huh?"

"Since when you been lucky?"

Odette's gaze wandered as she tilted her head. "That's... That's a fair point," she replied. "So, you want to go get lunch or something? I think I still owe you one for last time."

"Free lunch?" The Chinese girl narrowed her eyes and nodded, making a rather satisfied sounding noise. "This is good start, Snowflake. Very good start..."

Water trickled softly between rocks draped in vibrant, green moss. In a small, square-roofed pagoda, two incubators sat across from each other, alone. One, looking much like the rest of his brothers - albeit with a billowing, crimson scarf - looked out over the garden, absorbing the serenity of the carefully arranged landscape. The other, wide-bodied and sitting primly atop a bright red pillow, lifted a small teacup to his lips and drank deeply, closing his eyes as he savoured the taste.

"Exquisite," Fubey breathed, almost more of a sigh than a word. "Absolutely exquisite, brother. You must return my compliments to Miss Marigold. Her cultivation techniques are simply unmatched."

A smile came to the other's face as he continued to observe the garden. "I believe the only technique she uses is love, brother," he replied, softly and serenely. "It can do a great many things. The perfect pot of tea is, as they say, only the tip of the iceberg."

Fubey regarded his older brother with an intrigued eye. He had always been the most thoughtful and, perhaps, eccentric of the incubators. Some saw him as naive, others an idealist, and even more believed him insane. To Fubey, however, he was his most treasured brother. The fat incubator chuckled as his gaze turned to the outdoors.

"Perhaps," replied Fubey, "but I was under the impression that it had more to do with magic, does it not?"

Kelzang lifted one of the small cups to his lips and took another drink, letting out a soft chuckle as well. "I suppose so, brother," he said. "But, in either case, you deserve no less than the best, what with the week you have had. I am glad to hear young Miss Brighton is well again, both in body and mind."

The larger incubator nodded before taking another sip of tea. He had, admittedly, been worried nearly as much as her closest friends; not that he would admit it to anyone other than his brother.

"But I did, brother," the Seventeenth interrupted. "I say that not in reflection, but as a fact. I had already sent out the order. It is only by some divine intervention that she never learned of my error in judgement."

"I," Kelzang paused and looked down into his tea, "I see..."

"I failed Brie," Fubey continued. "She asked that I look after Odette. I was supposed to care for her, not ki-"

"Brother, please!" The Seventh pleaded. "If that is truly the case, then let us be thankful that nothing came of it. Odette is well, and that is what matters most. The past is best learned from, not dwelt upon."

The larger incubator nodded and took a long sip of tea. "I apologize, brother," he paused, then took a another drink as he considered his next words. "Do you... Do you think Brie would be pleased with Officio if she saw it now?"

"Now there is an interesting question," Kelzang said, giving a short chuckle. "Miss Eldridge was a... rather difficult person to please, as I recall. In a way, she reminded me of Xiaomei, back in her youth. I imagine that she would certainly be upset that things did not unfold quite as she had planned... but, yes, I believe she would be pleased."

Fubey gently swirled his tea around in its cup, watching the scattered leaves dance as he absorbed his brother's words. Never had there been a magical girl who meant more to him than Brie Eldridge. A small part of him was arrogant enough to believe that none of his brothers had ever cared for any of their girls more than he did for her. With her at his side, he had never felt as small before his brothers as he did the past three years.

"But, hrm," the Seventh started, taking a lengthy sip as he chose his words, "to create the 'perfect' magical girl. A noble goal, certainly. I would say she fared better than most others who have tried. Misguided, though, I think."

Kelzang turned to look out at the garden once more. "A flower alone is nothing more than a flower, no matter how beautiful it may be. It serves no higher purpose and, in time, it will grow old, wither and die. But, look then at this garden, brother."

As the Seventh gestured outward with one ear-hand, Fubey followed his brother's gaze. It was something the two Officios had built together many years previous, a sign of everlasting friendship between the two. Kelzang had overseen the planning whilst girls from both Officios designed and built it. Even now, one girl from each was assigned to maintain it every week.

"When placed with love and care, even a simple daisy can help create a sight more precious than the most beautiful lotus," Kelzang explained. "By our actions, we allow each part to achieve its highest potential. From the smallest pebble to the tallest tree, each works together to create something more beautiful than any one part alone. This is true harmony, brother; many parts working toward a greater good."

Fubey looked into his tea cup once more, nodding to himself as he pondered the thought. "An Officio... is a garden, is it?"

"And, remember, dear brother," the Seventh added, pointing at the fat incubator, "it is only by the skilled hand of a gardener that the garden is able to become beautiful."

The Seventeenth laughed softly and shook his head, saying, "If only I could be as skilled or brave as you, Kelzang. Perhaps then our brothers might take me a seriously. I dare say, they might show me a bit more respect were I as unpredictable as the Ninth."

"They might," the scarfed incubator replied, "but is it not better to be loved than feared? Your magical girls adore you for your policies, even though our brothers may not. Is that not enough, brother?"

"I suppose you have a point," the Seventeenth conceded, sipping at the last of his tea, "but I must admit, I do very much miss my prized lotus."

"Miss Eldridge?" Kelzang chuckled. "I believe the amaranth would suit her better, would it not?"

The incubators laughed and spoke for some time, reminiscing of the past and discussing the future just as they always did. Eventually, a girl with long, raven hair and skin like porcelain stepped up to the tiny pagoda, bearing a tray with a fresh pot of tea and cookies. She smiled brightly with a peaceful sincerity, bowing her head as she set the tray down without a word and began to unload its contents on to the table.

"Ah, thank you, Miss Dalia," Fubey said, nodding to the girl as she refilled his tea cup.

The Seventh bowed his head, thanking her as well. The girl bowed her head in kind, never saying a word even as she left.

"Your new tender seems very at home here," Kelzang said, watching her as she walked away. "What is her name? Miss Dalia, was it?"

"Heidi Dalia, yes," the larger incubator answered. "A very quiet and humble girl. I thought she would do well here."

The Seventh's gaze wandered back out over the garden as he poured himself a fresh cup of tea. "Sounds very much like someone I know."

"-nd so now we're living together."

"So, what?" Xiaomei waved her chopsticks at the Canadian. "You going to settle down now or something?"

The pair dined in a noisy, bustling Chinatown restaurant with a name Odette could barely remember much less pronounce. Little old ladies jostled between tables, bringing out food and shouting orders in Chinese as they went. The Warmaster and former Warmaster made an odd couple - one dressed in a flamboyant shrine maiden outfit, the other wearing a modest, unfashionable ensemble of jeans, t-shirt and jacket. Odette had long since stopped bothering to master the use of chopsticks and prodded a plate of noodles with her fork.

"'course not," she responded, shaking her head. "You know me. I'm thinking I'll put my name in for Equerry, since a friend of mine is already lined up for Rank Leader. I'll be damned if I'm letting that bitch Argente take the post."

Xiaomei gave a snort of laughter as she shovelled another mouthful of rice into her face. The concept of having to volunteer for a position before being considered had always been one of the Seventeenth's many quirks.

"You never had Equerry, did you?" Asked Xiaomei, giving the other girl a wry grin. "Nobody want the job, huh?"

"Oh, a couple people did," Odette forced a hollow smile. "You remember Mimi, right? Miranda?"

"Ah..."

The former Warmaster shook her head as she twirled noodles around her fork. "It's fine. It's been two years, I figure I oughta get over it by now. Time move on and let it go."

Xiaomei smirked. "Took long time, but you finally grow up. Old Lady would be proud," she said, before pointing her chopsticks at the former Warmaster. "Shame you still so short, though."

"Just can't give a straight compliment, can you?"

"You should be happy I give compliment at all!" The Chinese girl smirked as she took a long sip of green tea. "So what else you going to do with new found wisdom, hm?"

Odette had to think for a moment. She hadn't exactly given everything much though beyond moving in with Lotte and finishing her assignment. There were a few matters that she would have liked taken care of, but the future was a blur aside from those select few things.

"I'll probably go out to the compound and visit Harry," she said at last. "We used to be bestfriends and I haven't seen her in months..."

"How she doing these days?"

"Stable, last I heard," Odette replied. "She can walk a bit with a cane, but usually she uses a wheelchair. The Vennies say she's probably only got a few months left. Khan takes care of her most of the time, but all of them chip in however they can. Secundus is still training to take over the position. You remember her right?"

The Vindicare shook her head.

"Monica? Lightning bolts on her helmet?"

"Ooooh! Lightning face girl! Yeah, yeah, I remember her. But we never talk before, I think."

"She's a really good kid. Reminds me of Harry back when we were first contracted."

Xiaomei laughed and took another sip. "I used to wonder if there anything between you two. Guess that wrong, huh?"

"Hell, I used to wonder about us myself," Odette shrugged, giving a sheepish grin. "Hanging out with her all the time sure gave me a hell of a tolerance for Culexus magic, though."

The Chinese girl snorted, sputtering in her tea, and slapped the table. "You-You remember time you get in argument with Malal? She keep trying to make you throw up-"

"And I just kept getting acid reflux from hell, yeah funny." The Eversor smiled, cold and hollow. "Until all of you guys started betting on how long I'd last before blowing chunks."

"Four minute!" Xiaomei nodded. "Good record! Won Xiaomei twenty dollar!"

Odette shook her head. "Right. So that's the extent of my plans. You should call me up if you get anything fun. Nothing interesting happens around here that often."

"Maybe. I think about it," the other girl teased. "So, ah, what about little sister?"

Odette nearly choked on a mouthful of noodles. As much as it pained her to realize, the though of her sister hadn't crossed her mind in a very long while. Hearing the ever-belligerent Xiaomei ask about her certainly didn't help her shock. After several seconds of violent coughing and sputtering, she said, "Vida? What- What about her?"

"You not going to go and see her?"

"Xiao, I haven't talked to her in YEARS."

"I just giving suggestion. Little birdy tell me you still keep picture of her in wallet, yes?"

Odette froze and flushed a bright crimson. Of course she did. She always had.

"W-what's it to you?"

"Why you so embarass? You ashame of meimei or something?"

"No, it's just-"

"Then show Xiaomei! Lighten up! Why you have to act like super serious big shot?"

Odette grumbled quietly, but said nothing as she reached into her back pocket. With a low grunt of effort, she produced her wallet, opened it and handed it across the table.

"That's, um," Odette murmurred, "that's this year's school picture."

A wide, toothy grin broke out across Xiaomei's face as she stared at the photo. The girl looked similar to Odette - short silver hair and shimmering blue eyes - but was noticeably taller, better endowed and had softer, more feminine features, unmarred by time and battle.

"Uwooooh!" The Chinese girl exclaimed. "She cute! So this where tall and boob gene went! How old you say she is?"

"She's, um, she's sixteen, turning seventeen this year," Odette answered, quickly adding, "and shut up!"

Xiaomei giggled, then handed the wallet back. "So Snowflake melts when she talk about little sister. I keep that in mind~"

"You do the same thing when I ask about Dahlia!"

This time it was Xiaomei's turn to blush and stammer out an embarassed response. The two old colleagues continued catching up and bickering for nearly an hour more before word came from Holly that the incubators' meeting had concluded.

Odette settled the bill - far more than she had expected - and the pair hugged and said their good byes. It wasn't until Xiaomei had already reached the door that she stopped.

"Ah! One more thing!"

The Chinese girl reached into her sleeve, and after a moment's fussing pulled out a tupperware container full of cookies.

"Dahlia hear about incident and make these for you yesterday. YOU SEND THANK YOU LETTER OR ELSE!"

Odette's eyes twinkled and a child-like grin came to her face as she accepted the package. "Ahhh! I- I need to save these for later. Nothing from you?"

Again, the prayerstick appeared in Xiaomei's hand and struck the other girl's head. "You get to eat lunch with beautiful, sophisticated Spiritual Liege of Seventh Officio herself! You should be grateful!"

"Whatever you say," Odette laughed. "I'll see you soon, hopefully."

"You keep in touch this time. Jiejie not going to hunt down stupid Snowflake down just to say hi, okay?"

"Fine, fine. Get outta here, Armpits."

Again, Xiaomei reached for the door, only to stop short.

"Ah! One more thing! Uncle want me to deliver message. He say, Fatty not show it, but he worry about you a lot while you went missing. He call Uncle almost every day while you gone. So don't forget he care about you," the Chinese girl stopped, then finally opened the door. "That it. Now, if you excuse me, I going to go throw up now."

As the two left, in a secluded corner of the restaurant, a woman with a snake's eyes closed her newspaper. Neither the Warmaster nor the ex-Warmaster had noticed her in the slightest, despite the fact that she had arrived several minutes after they had. She smiled, laughing to herself as she got up, and tossed a handful of change on the table. The woman pulled her black trenchcoat on, then tugged a matching fedora down over a short mass of vibrant green hair. Her job was about to get much, much easier.

Jarmila's Journal, February 26

So I've just come home, in the morning. Bought this little book, too.

It was an eventful day and night, and my thoughts on it now will probably matter in the future. So, I've returned to writing a journal, like the one I wrote after the contract. In the event that I die, people could misinterpret my words and actions, and twist me into something I am not. Better express myself in no uncertain terms.

I should probably write it down while it's still fresh in my head. Kinda tired, but my left hand still hurts even after I've had it healed, and the head is full of all kinds of thoughts, so I wouldn't fall asleep. Grabbed a snack and got started with it right away.

So. Late evening two days ago, the cat had called me up directly. Said there was a schedule change, that I am not going to be hunting alone. They want me to take an Info-cyte and a full squad of almost fresh recruits in there. But we would still be hunting the same Witch. It had already pissed me off pretty bad back then, but I've needed the rest. So, I just went to the bed right away, to get up earlier, thinking I'd ask Panna about the reason. Because, I thought, it's probably her fault. Taking blame for the necessary evils is her job.

[1/20] ~~I'm so sorry~~

4 AM is actually a very good time for making your way to Prague's Officio Assassinorum. You can use even the most publicly exposed entry points, and nobody will be suspicious. At four, not even the bench-dwelling hobos of the city center are awake yet - and the Old Town close by, that's already a sanctuary which people rarely enter anymore.

Before everything, I went to get Barbara's full file in the archive. Normal Vanus weren't around to help me, but all the Librarians were already awake. Or was it still awake? Either way just can't be healthy. Then again, they don't really go above and see the sun much, so they can lose track of time as something other than numbers on the display. I guess their work schedule becomes much more lax once they advance in rank, so they just become more nocturnal, as it suits them.

I knew who Barbara was well enough, but they don't allow me to take the details home from their bookshelf maze. So, this was the only way to go over it again.The younger girls usually get a less classified version to hand, but I am expected to seek out the full thing on my own, so chances are I may have been the last person on the assignment to read up on her proper.

But hey, it's the bookworm Officio,they only need an Eversor Rank Leader for the smashing. I could go there blind and just purge her anyway, it would just be a lot more messy. They already pretty much pay me for improvisation. That still takes some skill, though.

Why did you call it that? It brings me such joy!

>> ☐ Ratmie 04/06/14(Sun)15:00 No.31301639

The worse part is, I guess, that I also improvise when motivating girls and dealing with responsibility. Delegating personell logistics and paperwork to Panna and squad leaders whenever I can. I fully accept blame for the organization being a huge mess this way. If you ask me, though, whoever does the office stuff willlingly is also pretty shady.

It's no coincidence that the Twelfth has both a lot of shady people, and a massive Vanus aparate.

Anyway, every speech I'd make to the girls is an ad-lib. You shouldn't want to be a leader, will to power corrupts, but power itself doesn't, if it's given for free. Or something like that, I don't remember it right. A girl working in the Archive told me that, when I've asked for help with leadership, books on the topic and so, shortly after I've replaced Kamile. Asking that had actually kind of backfired, because now I've got a neat excuse for when I want to keep being the hit-things-hard person. It seems that being cunningly brutal rather than brutally cunning is why I am not considered a Warmaster candidate, so it's working out.

Kamile seemed to think it as well, that warmastering is the worst thing that can happen to you here. She really helps me out with the complicated stuff, even beyond grave. What I say to the girls myself is mostly just the what she taught me. It would be great, if I could also tell them the "Never lie to the cat, but make yourself look dumb when he's around, just learn to act like him". Best lesson she gave me.

Speaking of Warmasters, Barbara, the Witch we were going to hunt, is a former Warmaster of the Twelfth, from since before my time. At this point, it just doesn't surprise me anymore.

I'll write the basic profile down here:

Barbara, Witch of Retribution
Card: [A Witch who only wishes to rest, with a tired nature. But, as the storm moves with her, she cannot escape the ruckus. So, she destroys all resting places out of spite. Maybe she should have just sat down in the rain.]

Familiar: Hassan
[An image of a honorable gentleman, holding seat for a lady. Only really useful in time of peace. In the end, he always only thinks of himself. They are strong when they fight in her name, but limp in Barbara's pressing presence.]

Ominous. It seems that her Barrier consists of draper, her Familiars are swords hanging on it, and that she uses lightning magic in addition to being deadly in melee. That stood out to me - can Witches actually use their old tricks? Can't they just kind of do whatever they want with their pastel Witch shenanigans? I recall being told that how they manipulate their world and our magic are two sides of the same coin, and that some rare magical girls can interact with the Witch side of things - can it work the other way around too?

I mean, most Witches don't seem to understand their predicament to begin with.

After that, it said that in order to find her, you should follow the rain and splinters. Nobody in the Archive could explain what this means. Only the girl who lived through fighting her, and the Vanus who wrote it down, would know. Big Fish took both. That's a dead end you run into a lot when you track the Twelfth's past.

That new oriental Librarian from Tenth was the one to bring the file and go over it with me, apparently Japanese. Spoke broken Czech, but perfect German. Still really impressive, if she had transferred on such short notice. Must be a polyglot.

She made a point oftelling me, that while I've been around to see the recent events, the Twelfth's history is quite impenetrable and suspicious for outsiders and newbies. I guess she's right. If she's having trouble piecing things together, a new recruit must be completely left in the dark. Our complex classification system doesn't help that at all. I mean, I don't even know how things were during the commie rule, which is barely two decades - not to mention our roots. Is that kind of stuff in the Librarium, or even deeper? Since there's no Chief Librarian, is there even anybody with a high enough rank to look that deep anymore?

According to what this new girl had said, Barbara was going to be crazy strong. And rather entirely unfitting to be anyone's first assignment. Considering this whole thing was decided by either Juunibei or Panna, and how they keep ranting about permanently being understaffed, you would think they would be more incentive to preserve their new troops.

I've hurried to visit Panna's garden before the appointment's time, hoping she would be awake now, too. Damn, this woman's place has the worst elevator music in the world.

Sure enough, the devil never sleeps. She could be found in the lab in the back, mashing some awfully sweet smelling herbs.

"Are you here to complain that she is too tough for the recruits?" She asked from behind the corner. That's just rude.

"Barbara rarely appears, and only stays in one place within a window of few hours. She requires immediate attention. When it turns out that on the same day, we have an exemplary course planned, with a Rank Leader, it's a good opportunity to show off. To lead by example."

"That's not even my course, though. It's just your bad management. You know too well how bad I am with that stuff. You've even used to discourage me from talking to recruits in the past. You can't be getting senile, right? Let's just postpone the girl's first hunt to tomorrow and scry them up something smaller in the countryside - I can purge mine alone."

That made her actually stop doing what she was doing. Both the concern and the insult got to her for once, I think.

"We could do that, but a part of the course was testing out a new version of the Info-cyte. And how it's going to work in a collective. You should know that, did you even read the dossier? Did you talk to the leader of that Squad yet? She would probably know. If it turns out she's beyond your skill, which she isn't, I just need you to burn her whole place down, get out of there alive, and tell me how the girl with the circlet had performed. You are strong, it shouldn't be a problem. I don't see a real risk aside from the potential loss of resources, but letting Barbara roam or losing you would be more costly."

"Goddammit, here you go with treating people like things again. I hate this so much."

"Hang on to that hatred. It will lead you to victory."

"Fuck. Fuck. I am off."

On the ride back down under, I've pondered about how I am going to talk to the recruits. About my leadership skills. Being directly responsible for the actions of other people puts a tiny bit more weight on my shoulders than I am comfortable with. If it was my call, I'd just want to be friends with everyone in the Officio, or I'd consider them a family. Panna says that this is "a sign of the old Slavic social tendency to regress into a tribal structure in a pinch", and that it had historically only hurt us, so it's better to get over it.

"I've been told that I should walk you through your first hunt today. So, I will. If you want to clear something up before we go, ask away." There.

One of them had politely raised a hand. It was the Squad Leader, though, newly appointed, but experienced enough. This girl had a fancy name. What was it, Popelka? Or do they just call her that, because the feathered hat and arbalest make her look like that one version of Cinderella? "Sure. What is it?"

"Excuse me if this is something trivial, miss, but why isn't miss Twardowska running us through this mission? It was supposed to be an exercise with our Rank Leader, and yesterday I am told out of blue that our squad is assigned an Info-cyte, and that our target has changed and we are now hunting a Witch like that, who would normally take several squads? Do you have some insight into these changes?"

Amazing. So, by skipping over their dossier, I've missed absolutely nothing, and even avoided unnecessary confusion. "I get it now. Warmaster's Aide didn't even bother telling me you're a Vindicare squad. You see, the thing is,Martina had been reassigned on a high priority mission yesterday. So important, it seems, she couldn't even contact you before going. I know that much. She can't attend today, either, and normally, your first hunt would just be postponed. I'd prefer to take Barbara on alone, but it's not my place to decide. And I can use you girls well enough."

☐ Ratmie 04/06/14(Sun)15:05 No.31301730

They seemed to tense up, when they've had it confirmed that this isn't a mistake in paperwork, and that it's happening, right now.

"I am going to need a more detailed description of your squad. Weapons, spells, capacities, every ace and joker you have up your sleeve. The cheap tricks and the last resorts"

The new, reconstructed version of Vindicare Squad 8 (Libra) was all newbies, amounting to a total of six weapon users, and six of what Martina calls "blasters". We've got a lot in the Twelfth, but that's still a huge number - especially considering that Squad Leader is a weapon user as well. From what I remember, her career had consisted mostly of protection sort of jobs. Why does Panna have a counter-sniping expert instruct people on how to throw fireballs and sparkling neon stars? Shouldn't that be done by a Librarian, who would know better? Or is she trying to make the Squad Leaders into dedicated teachers?

I don't like blasters. They're always full of themselves, needlessly flashy, and Witch out all the time, since they're just that dependent on the juice. I, for one, have been smart enough to bring a weapon or three along, even when I couldn't create one out of magic yet, back when all I could do was set myself on fire. If an Eversor's ability is expensive, she is soon going to feel the results on her skin, and does her best to get good - but Vindicare are just too spoiled. Isn't the first thing that they teach them to run away? Like that, they'll never get into a situation where they have to actually hit somebody over the head with their sparkling wand of love. This isn't a video game, in real life, you've got to cover your weak spots. Is it that much of a bother to learn how to shoot a gun?

With all that said, blasters are what you usually want against Witches. You can't just beat Walpurgisnacht to death with a club. Set the club on fire with your magic, then we're talking.

The last girl, who made no introduction, must have been the Info-cyte, then. Turned out to be a raven haired everygirl, with a wind jacket she must have been freezing in considering the season, an empty stare above the eye bags, and terrible posture.

"Um, Ma'am. She didn't say a word since she came." Said the plump girl next to her, "She also threw hands to the sides when she had walked in, like so. Excuse me if it's not important, but I can tell a druggie when I see one."
Yeah, we all can.

"That's alright. She's an Info-cyte. The previous ones had to dip their gems in a lot of chemicals before they would put the helmet on, so I bet they just use a lot more of that now. You'll meet a lot Vanus who have a thing for it, too - we've even got a Librarian with powers that work by getting high." It sounds sillly, but she'll be glad to give you a long rant about historical cultural precedents of intoxication in magic arts. "Anyway, somebody will need to hold her hand, and we'll split into four groups from here..."

She really didn't say a word though, even when she did follow. The girl had those flat cheeks, she had no fat on her, it's easy to be distrustful of somebody like that. I could only pray that Panna isn't actually senile, and still knows what she's doing, sending somebody like that along, even if nobody else is let in on it.

Locating the Barrier was no work at all. It was supposed to appear at the top of a building, apparently. But getting there in so many people was going to be difficult, especially in the morning. That's why I've split them, otherwise we'd look like a goddamned field trip.

Before what turned out to be a whole apartment complex, we came across a commotion of people. Some poor old sod had jumped out of the window. Fortunately, there was just a cop, a guy who might have been a medic, and the morbidly curious neighbors. He lived alone, so it wasn't too dramatic for the girls - imagine if there was a crying wife and kids or something.

The cop had actually asked my group whether we would happen to live there. "It's a party," I've said, "there should be a lot more girls arriving yet."

He seemed kind of happy about that, like he knew what was up. A cop definitely might. I've kind of expected somebody from the building to question us, too, saying they've never seen any of us around, and why aren't we in school on workday morning, but nothing of the sort happened. The presence of a Witch can really mess with normie heads.

I've sent the two girls of mine up with the elevator, phoned the Squad Leader to make a routine sweep for Familiars in the neighborhood with her group, and took the stairs myself, so I could do the same inside. Wouldn't want any loose ends.

As I've covered the floors one by one keeping up a bit with the elevator, it turned out that one apartment had it's door open. I guess it must have belonged to the old man. I've rushed in there - but despite my Witch sense tingling, nothing really seemed out of ordinary. A damn dirty sink, two shoddy paintings, a pair of worn looking sabers on the wall, a soft sofa, two different armchairs, an open book on the table, a cold cup of cofee next to it. I guess it must have belonged to the old man.

No real closets for a Familiar to hide in, either, and I didn't bring gloves. But, just as I've moved to make a few steps into the bathroom, I saw movement on the wall.

Right, her Familiars are swords. I've grabbed one of the sabers by hilt, and hit the other with it. The angle was good, didn't even leave a scratch on the wall or anything, and the Familiar had melted right into the black nothingness that it was made of. I've even expected the one I've grabbed to shift it's blade somehow, and try to cut me, but it didn't seem to be able to do anything beyond a low pitched whine. Wanting to be extra careful, I've first carried it outside, then transformed, and burned it to crisp.

The elevator had a good few floors over me now. Getting ahead of it again, I saw that the last Familiar was hanging at its wires. I've managed to cap him with a spiked ball right away, but it still sent chills down my spine, seeing him there. Using the elevator like that wasn't very bright at all.

Meeting up with the girls on the top floor, they seemed shocked to see how I look transformed. It always appears so to people, that it changes me a lot, but it's really just about losing that boxer nose of mine, and maybe some fat, and straightening up.

Straightening up your spine can do some amazing things for you. It gives me half a head in height. Being huge is actually a lot like being smart or being homosexual. People acknowledge it much easier if they've figured out that part of you themselves, because you didn't shove it in their face.

For that, though, you need some basic humility. And, boy, I've got nothing else about me that I am proud of, so it doesn't even take much to be humble.

Having waited for the three remaining groups, I've gotten that quiet "ooh" out of them three more times.

"Barbara is strong. Purging her is going to be hard. I know that most of you have slacked off on the basic training, so I'd say that some of you will die there. It would be nice if we could avoid that, but don't bet on it. Just accept it.

Once we are there, focus on the Familiars and let me take out the Witch. Prioritize keeping yourself and others alive. Don't ever split, keep others within sight. In a Barrier like this, the Familiars will eventually get us surrounded if we rest. Keep moving. I will carve the path for you.

If somebody is injured so much he would die, but his Soul Gem is left intact, someone needs to pick the Gem up, and keep it. You've already been taught this in the basic training, but I'll say it again because of how important it is: now that you are Magical Girls, your body is much less important. Even death can be healed, as long as your soul is still in one piece.

If you get killed and lose control of your body, it's easy to panic, but try to calm down instead. Getting a new body will cost you a lot, but it's not like it ruins you. The Officio doesn't need to make you a debt slave like the government would. The Twelfth owns you ever since you've made the wish. That's honestly a pretty bad thing, all things considered, but also very helpful in its own way. You see, if you own something, you want to care for it. A lot of people don't realize this. We want you to be happy and strong and smart. Even if it never looks that way, I guess.

If nothing else makes you feel better about going to battle, I've been where you stand. My first Witch hunt was just as hard, and we have made it. Now I am a dedicated Witch hunter, and as far as I know, the most qualified person for this job, far and wide. You've got a friend in me."

Wow. Did I just make a speech without meaning to?

Now was the time for the Info-cyte to start up. Formerly, it was a helmet, and the Vanus would have to carry it around in a bag, but this one looked much more like a circlet. It was also kind of reminiscent of the crown that Panna wears even in civil, how she wears her Gem above her head apparently has to do with chakras. This one, on the other hand, was accented downwards, into the forehead. If somebody in the squad didn't know that the girl with us is a Vanus, they must have figured it out then.

Putting the circlet on, her azure eyes have gotten that empty glint that working Vanus have. "Initializing program Hard Boiled Wonderland. From the throes of death, Blessed Lady deliver me. Orders can now be assigned." articulated she. It was a lot like when a phone recorder is reading a written message.

That... sounded nothing like the Fourth. Panna hates dealing with the Sixteenth. We've always had trouble trusting the Thirteenth on principle. Though I guess nothing is stopping us anymore, if Strauss is really gone. And if sucking the feline phallus had finally gained Panna Incubator technology that she can use in personal projects, then all the bets are off forever.

The most likely version probably is, that only the hardware is comissioned, and one of our slightly less sane Librarians had programmed it.

"What's she going to be helping us with, anyway?"

"I have no idea either. The Info-cytes are meant to weaponize knowledge, since knowledge is all that the Twelfth has. Some of the previous prototypes were supposed to use precognition and tactical manuals in combat, but they've sucked, since you can't reason with Witches. From what I've been told, she's supposed to just observe. Hey, Info-cyte. An order. Focus on recording what's happening. Do not miss anything."

First steps we took on the roof showed us that she had her Barrier already well set up. It was really a bed sheet world, you couldn't see where all the draper is coming from for all the draper getting in way - but in addition to that, it had parquet floor, on which stood a ton of furniture. Mostly chairs and their variations. A few beds, too. There was a giant couch and a sky high bar stool. Man's lair. It actually looked quite a bit like that old guy's apartment.

What was downright bizarre was how the parquet planks were kind of in the right pattern, but twisted in all kinds of ways, and there were parquet hills and parquet holes.

Then the blades have descended from the knot of a ceiling, every single one with a lengthened finger guard or a basket. The sabers in the apartment were the same - it seemed to be a theme.

Popelka took aim at the closest, hitting it right on the weight center above its guard. The impact force tore it out of the cloth's grasp, and the sword clattered on the ground. That had confirmed her suspicion."Okay, so, you can focus on the cloth. Try not to go near them once they fall down. It'snot moving anymore, but it didn't disappear yet, either."

I gave her a nod. "You'd better watch for the ones coming from above, too." said I, materializing my flail. "I'll go on a bit ahead and try to draw the worst of them, don't lose sight of me."

To that, I've made a long leap on the huge barstool's gliding, hit it a few times to produce a good metal clang that the ones not alerted yet could hear, and then jumped from there, to smash the nearest Familiar down.

From there, they've tried to surround me right away, more than a dozen descending all around. While my main skill is made for that situation, using fire in here could get really dangerous, so I had to try being clean and defensive, holding them off with wide sweeps. They did quickly realize they're outmatched, and tried to wait for more to come instead, which pretty much made them target practice for the Vindicare.

Before long, bullets, bolts, arrows, and throwing stars have gotten them. Did they leave defense to the blasters? I'd still better not move too rigidly.

After their initial press, though, it became a cakewalk for me. Further in, I've noticed some of the sheets being wet and dropping water, and waited for the Vindicare squad, to tell them the Witch is probably near. I've noted that one blaster is missing.

"Oh yeah, she caught one through the cloth, right in the back. Then more where that came from. By the time I've nuked the area behind her, they already got her Gem. Shouldn't have gotten so close to the walls, since they're not really walls and all."

"I've told you. Some are hiding under the armchairs, too. Or in the stuffed ones." Their formation wasn't too tight, but they've seemed to know what they're doing, so I guess the cover pattern in a place like that must have just been really complex.

"Have you noticed how some of these chairs are broken or burned? One earlier looked like a lightning hit it. This, and the water, mean that the Witch is near, or so I hear. Let's go where there are the most splinters."

The Familiars have calmed down a lot since earlier. Girls would still shoot down any that would get too close, but there weren't any more coordinated attacks. The weapon users would actually miss every so often, since hitting a blade from distance is actually pretty hard.

The draper curtains were beginning to open up a bit, and all of it was wet, even dripping. When we've started to step into the puddles, and finally saw the stormy sky above, rain falling straight on us from it, we also saw the tall, thin Witch in midst of it all, cutting a sofa to pieces with one of the Familiars in hand.

"Good morning, Agnieszka. Though I probably don't have the right to call you that, since I wasn't around to meet you." She chucked her head to the side, evidently recognizing her past name.A long line of witch letters had appeared in my vision. How do they do it?

"I am sorry, but I can't read that, or speak German too well, for that matter. Anyway, it seems that you have an appointment with the Blessed Lady. Wouldn't want to miss it, would you? We came to show you the way!" I had to yell to beat the storm. Then, I've burnedthe flail up, and stated whirlingit above my head, it's head filling the air witha hiss, as it met the raindrops.

I think that carried the message across well enough. She had grabbed another of the swords hanging around her, and raised them above her head, too.

I didn't waste time and did my best to sucker punch her, leaving an arc of smoke and embers behind.But you can only afford to be so aggressive against somebody wielding two long choppyswords. She was really fast, too. It was troubling how she had no legwork, instead just kind of floating around like a kite in the wind. How do you even fence with somebody who flies? Do we have any flying Eversors? It had occurred to me, only faced with it, how practical it is. Could I learn to fly?

>> ☐ Ratmie 04/06/14(Sun)15:16 No.31301902

Along with the wind playing with the bed sheets, rain got a lot stronger. The ground was all a big puddle now. Having gained good distance, she had raised her swords above her head. First, I've thought it's a taunt. Then I got hit with a lightning bolt. And kept being hit by it for a good while. It didn't help I was standing in water. That's what I get for being cautious, and not curbstomping her.

By this time, I was long inside the Eversor trance, so I could tell right away that my heartbeat had stopped. Isn't lightning like a really thin, but hot and sharp blade going through you, so most people die of shock? That might be why.

"I'M OKAY" I've yelled back to the Vindicare "I'VE JUST GOTTA START MY FUCKING HEAR-"

Then I fell face first into the water, not very leaderly at all. It was going to take some time. The hit undidmy hair band, so that iy didn't pull - probably because of the hilarious thing that electrified hair do. But it meant I had one less sensation to deal with.

I've started entering the true depths of Eversor battle trance. Mind over matter, the mantra goes. My body is a puppet and nerves are but the strings.

The squad, I've seen in the corner of my eye, fought the Famillliars. That was good enough. Worse thing was, that Barbara had apparently wanted to pick another one off with her lightning. Popelka had thoughtfully hit the basket of her held blade, killing it so she had to pick up another, and gaining us a few seconds of time. The Info-cyte stood next to her, and was saying something I couldn't hear.

I could guess. She must have been suggesting optimal course of action, because how could a Vanus help here? But what she did was go forward, spreading her hands.

She was drawing some letters in the air with her fingers, I think it was Hebrew. Normally, only Culexus can really counteract magic, but I think she was trying to take apart the Witch's spell instead. Somehow. Maybe she had tried to build a barrier against magic? The important thing is-

That wasn't a magic attack, like the profile had said. It's her calling down a honest to god lightning strike. It smashed right through the fancy letters, into the Vanus girl's shoulder, the branches of light running all over her costume. She let out a horrible scream, it must have screwed with the circlet. Well, Panna was going to kill me for this. But, at the same time, wouldn't want her sacrifice to be in vain.

I've raised from the ground, burning bright, and blowing away the Familiars gathered around to chop themselves a piece of me. Done. It didn't take more than ten seconds, but that time could have been critical.

In the hell of magic blasting through the air, water drops, flames, smoke, and steam stinking of ozone, the curtains were all gone. So, the ground was littered with swords. I've picked one, a beautiful, bejeweled khanda, rather than my flail, and toned the flame down so that the sword wouldn't die. Having gone pretty deep already, to take control of my body and secure blood circulation, this setting was perfect.

If I have wanted to end it before anyone else dies, there was just one chance to perform the Mach Lunge right. If that had failed, I had a few more options, but this trick should do it. I've rushed right back at her. A draw-cut, thrust with both hands, a parry, and rather than seizing the initiative and pressing on, I've taken a step back and changed sword arm to the left, readjusting my stance. Wouldn't want to do this with the dominant hand.

She saw that I am going to be aggressive in this next exchange, and put up her guard.

One step, two steps, and I was in range, with the sword next to my back leg. The final step requires flexing your entire body to allow the joints to form a line. I felt the upcoming pain first as a distant reminder. But, like alarm clock in the morning, it became annoying. And just like that alarm clock, however loud, it had no control over me.

The thunder that rumbled through the storm this time belonged not to her, but to me.
She did try to parry high, but badly underestimated the force behind my blow. Didn't even move back, so I've cleaved right through her blade and body, and then through the ground, until my sword broke, along with my arm.

Then there was no rain anymore, and and a wave of whelming darkness came over us. Under my feet was a deep gash, and a Grief Seed right next to it. Around us lied a field of laundry poles, since we were obviously on a flat functionalist roof now. The Barrier itself was gone.

Taking a look back, I saw the Vindicare with their weapons still raised, one even firing off a shot at a Familiar that wasn't there anymore. In the distance lied a plump girl's body, with quite a few stab wounds in the back.

"W-what happened? Did you get her? I just saw you explode, and then-" Popelka didn't notice that she'd dropped formalities, which made me glad. She did notice I'm crouching though. "Are you hurt?"

"Yeah, a bit. What you saw, or didn't, was Mach Lunge. You should have seen Kamile use while she was around, it's her trademark technique." Wow, that got me a gasp. It's like all the respect that I get really stands on succeeding her.

"It's called that, because the blade's tip breaks the sound barrier a few times over.Plain and simple, you use your body as a tool, and swing your limb as hard as your body is possibly able to. If you are strong enough, your muscles alone can break your bones. Any Eversor can do some variation of this, I think, she just capitalized on it." Kamile had specialized in enchantment of organic things, though, so she wouldn't wreck her arm like I did just now. And if she did go to the point of hurting herself, she would swing just so much harder than anybody else.

She could make a training sword hard as diamond, and a bone harpoon sharp as razor. Her weapon would never break, and her flesh would never wither. She became a Rank Leader by challenging the person in charge at the time, and beating them up with a broomstick. But, when she did, she found that she could only lead by example. She wasn't very bright, and that's why she had ended up like that.

Which brings me to the the other girl standing here before us, with the circlet she wore lying on the ground, split in twine. This, I think, is where this story really begins.

She was looking at her pitch black Gem, it's gliding turning black and crumbling away, rattling, as if her rabid soul was trying to crawl out of the mind's cage. The girls around were looking shocked and terrified, depending on how well they understood what was going on. But she didn't care, she was busy staring into the abyss.

I'm sure she also saw it stare back at her.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 04/12/14(Sat)08:27 No.31426129

Without hesitation, you take one of the unthrown tomatoes - the small, tight smile on your face slowly widening into a toothy grin as your fingers curl over the firm, yet slightly-pliant skin of the crimson fruit.

You toss the would-be projectile from hand to hand as you consider your target - the blonde-haired head of a certain dogged journalist, her attention clearly fixed on the smartphone in her hand. Probably sending more lies and misinformation over the internet through her Chirpee account, no doubt. Just like how she made everyone see your first kiss with Midori.

As you draw a bead squarely on the back of NECO's skull - you realize that, if your life was being directed like a movie, or some cheap late-night anime pandering to some unwashed, shut-in demographic - this would be the exact time that two representations of your inner self would pop into existence over your shoulder. One goading you on, the other trying to dissuade you from your current path.

>>31426129

What you got instead was three voices, each one of them whispering into your ear, one after another. They didn't need to introduce themselves - you knew exactly who was which, despite the fact that they all spoke in the same voice that you'd hear coming out of your own throat.

And not one of them tried to stop you.

"D-don't lob it like a softball, that could overshoot her and hit someone else. Do it sidearm, but make sure you stand up briefly to get the throwing room you need. A-and time it when they're supposed to be throwing stuff! Patience is a virtue!"

"Squeeze the tomato gently, but firmly, taking care not to break the skin. This pulps the flesh inside without compromising its integrity for its journey towards the target. Be careful with your follow through, you don't want to overextend and be spotted."

"REMOVE. TOMATO. REPLACE. WITH. GRENADE."

...You didn't listen to that last bit, of course. As tempting as it obviously was.

The other two, though, you listened to very well.

Just as the signboards over the stage begin to light up - the letters for THROW blazing instead of what should be APPLAUSE - and the crowd beginning to wind up for their throws, it's here that you stand up and fling the slightly-squished tomato in your hand. As hard and as fast as you possibly can. A picture-perfect sidearm pitch, with a picture-perfect impact.

You wish you could have stopped time right then and there. Mainly to take photos. But the squawk that NECO erupted with, a split second after the soft fruit burst into soft crimson mush at the back of her head, giving her a chunky dye job - was enough fo ryou to savor. You could have eaten a hundred bowls of rice with her panicked cries alone.

"NYAAA! WHAT HAPPENED? WHAT HAPPENED?!" NECO squeals over the crowd jeering at Noriko onstage, both hands scrabbling at her splattered hair. "WHO THREW THAT?! Nooo, it's gonna stain my hoodie! A-ah, tissue, tissue, I know I brought tissues..."

>>31426134

You immediately sit back, lowering your arm and hunkering down in your seat. Willing yourself from laughing - or cackling - too loudly.

Just as you reach for the second tomato, though--

"I believe we're supposed to throw projectiles at the idol onstage, Matsuda-sama." A conspiratorially-quiet voice, familiar in its silken tones, speaks beside you. You blink here, and turn to look at a raven-haired girl wearing a baseball cap and a bomber jacket three sizes too big for her. She's also wearing spats, and ratty sneakers.

...Enishi?

"That was a very nice throw, though, Matsuda-sama." She smiles at you, blue eyes glowing from the shadow of her cap's brim. "I hope you don't mind my enjoying your retribution vicariously. I still haven't forgiven her for the lies she published." She sniffs here, before stabbing a spoon into the open pint of triple chocolate ice cream on her lap, levering out a large, dripping hunk. "Rea Ashford has yet to let me hear the end of it. Really!" She shoves the heaping spoonful into her mouth a moment later, her eyes squinting down at the stage as she chews.

How do you respond?

[]What are you doing here? I thought you hated Noriko's guts.
[]How's it like, watching your little sister get pelted with tomatoes?

What's she doing here, then? You thought she hated Noriko's guts - you can still remember her cold treatment of the young girl back at the hotel, during the Kirishima op.

"...I don't hate Noriko, Matsuda-sama." Enishi replies as she looks down on her tub of triple-chocolate ice cream, shaking her head slowly. "She may be an embarrassment to my parents, and a black mark against our name, but...she is still my sister, after all. And in her own way, she's excelling at what she chose to do with herself. That lives up to our standard, or at least I'd like to think so."

Your Callidus Rank Leader looks back up at you, something resembling regret shining in her eyes. "I've already lost a sister, besides. I have no plans of losing another - especially one who hadn't been as foolish as her older sisters, to take up a contract with an Incubator."

Enishi looks back at the girl being pelted with tomatoes onstage. Noriko had opened an umbrella a few moments into the barrage, a transparent one that showed her smiling and flushed face as she talked about how her big-bosomed classmates were all sluts who needed to die gory deaths. A couple of rows back, you see NECO furiously trying to get all the tomato out of her hair, stopping every few moments to take selfies of the damage.

"She doesn't know I'm here, though. I don't think she needs to know." Enishi sighs, before taking another scoop of ice cream and chewing it mournfully. "Father would perish immediately on the spot, and my mother would curse my name for eternity. Not to mention about Noriko being disowned."

She pauses for a moment. "I realize that sounds hypocritical of me, Matsuda-sama, but...if I'm to be here for my sister, I need to make sure that my parents do not find out about what she does."

Ah. Well. You can see where she's going here.

Not the guy you are asking but another drawdude, you learn to draw by like any other skill, friender.

Doing it, doing it enough you can tell what you are doing wrong, getting better at what's wrong and doing it more.

Failures will suck and will be many, but it is a necessary proponent to getting better so you don't let it drag you down, you use it to propel yourself forward to become better at it.

Fill sketchbooks, notebooks, pads of paper, digital canvases. Whatever your fancy is. Just draw and don't stop. Finish what you can, doodle for fun, sketch out ideas that pop into your mind so you don't lose them.

There's many a reference material on the internet and drawfags on /tg/ are the friendly sort and can probably point you in the right direction.

Good luck.

You grudgingly relent after a few moments' consideration. As much as you really hate getting roped into other people's beeswax - especially family stuff, like this - you also realize the importance of Noriko not finding out. If this is the status quo, and it seems to be working for everyone concerned, at least, then you're not going to do anything to shake it up.

At this, Enishi visibly brightens. "O-oh! Thank you, Matsuda-sama! I owe you a debt of unfathomable gratitude that I will work very hard to repay. On this night, you have done me, a member of the Karasawa clan, a very important boon." She brandishes her chocolate ice cream-covered spoon like some sort of sword. "I will work thricefold harder to exceed your expectations, and--um, Matsuda-sama, what are you doing?"

The hell does it look like? You grumble as you quickly - but carefully - scribble in the promise you've just made with Enishi into an empty page of your journal. Circling 'Do not tell Noriko about Enishi' a couple of times, and then underlining it to be sure. You're writing it down so you don't forget, you tell her, before growling 'Updated my journal' to no one else in particular.

Your Callidus Rank Leader's smile is polite, but you can tell she's a bit...worried, here. "I...I see. Matrsuda-sama, I apologize, truly, if you feel that this is something beneath you, or something you were forced into. I plan on telling her myself, truly, but not now. Not until...things calm down, especially with my parents." She bows her head, contrite. "I ask for your understanding and forgiveness, Matsuda-sama. I did not mean to place a burden on your shoulders, as you already carry the Officio wherever you go."

...She doesn't need to be so goddamn dramatic, you murmur as you put your Journal back into your inventory. You just don't like lying to other people, after all, especially to people like Noriko. It just doesn't feel right.

"I know. Which saddens me that I have to ask you to do so, Matsuda-sama. Regardless, I will endeavor to repay you for this deed, in whatever way you see fit."

Silence, here, as what she just said sinks in.

"And no, Matsuda-sama, that doesn't include my warming your bed for you."

...Right. Fine. Just so that's clear.

"That's something I'd like to offer for free, Matsuda-sama. Just for you."

...

You'll try to pretend you didn't hear that.

Anyway, she got an extra spoon or what? You haven't eaten anything for a while, and that ice cream has been making you salivate for a good bit.

"Always, Matsuda-sama." Enishi takes what looks like a slim silver case from the inside of her jacket, popping it open and holding out the contents to you. Three silverware dessert spoons gleaming in custom-fitted foam insets. "I always carry these just in case."

Just in case, huh? Right.

You take one of them, and start helping Enishi in the murder of her pint of triple-chocolate ice cream - while the both of you watch an M-idol stutter a few half-hearted insults at the crowd, and a thieving reporter cat struggle to clean the last chunks of tomato from her hair.

Dessert AND a show. Not too bad.

What do you do now?

Another tomato is just overkill, and there's very good odds we've got records on Enishi's sister, or if push were to come to shove, we could ask Noriko about her. So no need to pry.

You decide to watch the rest of the show in relative silence as Enishi shares her pint of ice cream with you. Noriko's show is...well, you sort of get why it's popular. She basically sets herself up as the target of a lot of her fans' frustrations - stuttering personal anecdotes and stories that seem to be specifically tailored to get a rise out of them, or to strike particularly-painful nerves. It's like stand-up comedy, but instead of making the audience laugh, it's to make them incensed enough to throw shit at the person speaking onstage, in a violent - yet harmless - act of catharsis.

M-idols are still weird - idols in general will always rub you the wrong way, honestly - but you at least understand why Noriko's doing it. It has purpose, and arguably more so than prancing about in skimpy underwear and singing about cakes or unrecquited love or anything like that.

The 'THROW' sign lights up a few more times as you watch, and you ignore the temptation of throwing another tomato at NECO. One solid hit's enough, there's no need for a follow-up. Besides, while it looked like she was taking selfies earlier, you knew she was just actually trying to surreptitiously see who could have thrown it. Chances are she's got a clue that it was you.

The show officially ends twenty minutes later, with the curtains closing and a friendly voice over the speaker system reminding everyone to clean up their messes and to dispose of any garbage in the proper receptacles. The curtains open again, and it's here that you see Noriko bowing and smiling to the audience - and instead of the jeers that she'd received earlier, all she gets is a resounding applause. Actual cheering, the sort you'd expect to be hurled at a superidol. As if they hadn't been hurling fruits at her only a few minutes ago.

Beside you, Enishi sniffs again, wiping at her eyes before putting the now-empty pint of ice cream away. "Oh, Noriko-chan. If only you knew how proud we actually are of you." She whispers, tears shining wetly in her eyes. "...Well, obviously not Mother and Father, but at least, Eldest Sister and I. ...You've grown up so much."

You respectfully wait for Enishi to gather herself, before telling her that you'll be visiting Noriko backstage. If she's up to it, she can join you.

Your Callidus Rank Leader smiles tearfully at you. "You know I can't, Matsuda-sama. It would ruin...this." She gestures to the still-cheering crowd. "As cruel as it seems, I'd rather not add more to the heap of injustice my family has piled on top of my youngest sister."

...Alright. If she's sure.

As you stand up to leave, it's here that Enishi places one hand on your arm.

"Please hug her for me, if you could, Matsuda-sama. Hug her like an older sister would."

You don't...you don't really do hugs--

"Then do something, Matsuda-sama! Anything affectionate that you may be able to do!"

Goddammit.

Fine. Fine. Something. You're not going to promise a hug, but you'll try to do something.

"...Thank you." Enishi sniffs, before bowing again. "Thank you, Matsuda-sama, for being so patient and considerate. We are blessed to have you lead us."

You shake your head her, and make to leave once more. You stop for a moment, before turning back and nodding at her.

"Thanks for the ice cream," you murmur.

A smile breaks across Enishi's face. "It was my pleasure, Matsuda-sama."

You make your way down to backstage a few moments later. In stark contrast to the super idol operation, there are literally no guards backstage, just some recording staff and a few janitors grumbling about the mess they're about to clean. There's a substantial group of fans orbiting around Noriko, however, all of them chatting with her animatedly while holding out pamphlets and tickets for her to sign. ...Looks like she's more popular than you thought. As expected from the Number 2 M-idol in Japan.

You hang back to wait for the crowd to dissipate, preferring to talk to Noriko after she'd savored her time in the limelight - but only after a few moments, she seems to spot you, and pushes her way through her ring of fans. "M-Matsuda-san?" She looks up at you, eyebags and greasy hair and wide eyes and all. "Y-you came...you really came to see my show...!"

She immediately rushes over to you, her fans trailing after her. One grubby, tomato-stained hand thrusts into her bag to bring out what appears to be a sealed action figure of...someone with a piercing gaze, a chainsaw-toothed shield, and a tacky magical girl costume. It also has a blue rose accessory. "I-I didn't really think you'd come all the way over here, M-Matsuda-san!" She thrusts the action figure into your hands. "P-please, please, if...if it's not too much, please sign this! I-It'd be the crowning jewel of my collection...!"

How do you react?

[]Give her a hug.

You take the boxed action figure from her - as well as the permanent black marker she's holding out to you - and carefully sign your name on the figure's plastic window. ...She does realize that you have nothing to do whatsoever with the book series or the animation, right? Wouldn't it be better if she had the VA sign the figure, or at least the writer?

Noriko shakes her head, dislodging a few chunks of tomato from her hair. "N-no, Matsuda-san! I mean, I already have Green Green's autograph - I already bid quite a bit on an MISB Miracle Midori figure that has her signature on it!" She's all but shaking in her shoes as she nods towards the figure in your hands in trembling anticipation. "A-and I don't want a that mean 765 Pro idol's signature, they're not even valuable! I want your signature, Matsuda-san! I want the r-real Murder Mayumi's autograph!"

...Mean? Is she talking about Iori? Well, you sort of agree, thinking back on your first meeting with the brown-haired idol, but...she wasn't really that abrasive, if you'll be honest. Just a bit.

Still, you complete your autograph, and hand the pen and the figure back to its jittery owner, who all but jumps and squeals as she grips the box with white-knuckled fingers. ...You'd like to tell her that it's nothing to be THAT excited about, that it's only your signature, but you have the feeling that she wouldn't be listening. You're not exactly looking to be a buzzkill either.

"T-thank you! Thank you, Matsuda-san!" Noriko beams up at you, tears of joy in her eyes - and it's here that you see just how much she resembles Enishi, in that smile. Proving that they are in fact true sisters. "I-I'll cherish this forever! I'll never open it or sell it!"

That's...yeah. Alright. You're glad she likes it so much.

"I-I love it! Matsuda-san coming over to watch my show, a-and helping me complete my collection!" She sniffs long and loud here, sounding much like someone trying to hock the mother of all loogies. "I-I don't know how to thank you!"

You shake your head here, and reach out with your hand to pat her on her head. ...Making sure to touch only the parts of her hair that don't look as greasy, or as mucked with tomato. She freezes at this gesture, making a noise not unlike a mouse being stepped on.

She doesn't need to thank you or anything. The...show was pretty interesting, and you could tell she works hard. It was an eye-opening experience for you, definitely.

"M-Matsuda...san..." Noriko murmurs your name, dark-ringed eyes looking up at you like an extraordinarily-sweaty puppy waiting to be kicked.

"Noriko-chaaan! I'm here! Got all the tomato out of my hair finally, nya!" A cringingly-familiar voice suddenly bursts from the corner, and it's here that you turn to see NECO striding towards you, rubbing a wet towel on her hair. And true enough, she's got most of your handiwork out. "I got you a towel too, use it while it's still warm and all--" The blonde journalist stops in her tracks as she sees you patting Noriko's head.

Silence.

"NICE DESU NE!" In a flash, NECO's camera is out, snapping a hundred pictures a second, flitting around you like some sort of demented fairy. "Oho! So the Warmaster of the Ninth actually goes to M-idol shows! Who'd'a thunk it?! Holyballswhatascoop!"

"H-hey...c-c'mon..." Noriko's eyes go wide at NECO's sudden display of journalistic integrity. "Y-you promised you wouldn't..."

You squint through the blinding flash bursts of NECO's camera, before reminding her of the promise she apparently made to Noriko. Is she going to break something like that, just after Noriko's show, and in front of all her fans, too? She should be ashamed of herself.

Noriko, seemingly emboldened by your words, suddenly disengages from you to run up to NECO - and snaps out with a vindictive kick at the thieving cat's shin. The blonde yowls in pain, letting go of her camera to grab at her leg. The device, annoyingly enough, saved by the strap around her neck, making it hang and bounce on her chest.

"NYA?! What was that for, Noriko?!" NECO all but shrieks. "Just as I was getting a good shot...!"

"Y-you promised!" The short, grubby M-idol stamps a foot on the floor. "Y-you promised not to a-act like a d-d-DILDO when she showed up!"

NECO's crimson eyes go wide at this, before swiveling towards you, then back to Noriko again. "A-al...alright, I said that, nya, but--"

"B-but nothing! It was a p-pinky promise too, you dildo...! No scoops, o-or ambush interviews! J-just you showing up for support, l-like a friend's supposed to be!"

Silence, and it's here that NECO lets out a sigh, before reaching up and turning her camera off. She gives the stern, teary-eyed Noriko a pat on the head too, one that doesn't seem to calm the M-idol down the slightest.

"...Yeah, okay, nya. Nya got me dead to rights. I'm sorry." The blonde shakes her head, dejectedly. "Just...reflex, I guess, nya. Since I'm kinda gagged from reporting on her, I thought this'd be a juicy chance." She nods at you, her expression suddenly sly for a few moments before becoming its previously-bashful self. "Still friends, Noriko-nyan?" She holds out a fist to the M-idol.

A few moments, and Noriko bumps her fist against NECO's outstretched own. "Still friends. N-now, apologize to Matsuda-san."

It's here that NECO's expression sours. "W-what...? B-but I don't...I'm an impartial journalist! I'm not supposed to apologize--"

"APOLOGIZE! NOW!"

"Nnnh...you're pushin' it, nya," The blonde grumbles, but nods toward you. "S-sorry. Sorry for being...a JOURNALIST OF UTMOST INTEGRITY--"

NECO's bullish proclamation gets cut short by another yowl of pain as Noriko kicks her other leg. "A-Apologize PROPERLY!"

"O-okay, okay, nya! I'll apologize already! No kicking!" The blonde limps towards you, and hastily bows. "Y-yes! Really, really very sorry for--"

"--FOR BEING A DILDO!"

"F-for being like that...to you...earlier." NECO's words are oddly strained, as if every word is causing her physical pain to say. She looks up at you with a pitiful expression, both wary and vulnerable at the same time. "I-is...is that okay? I apologized, right?"

How do you react?

This has been one of the worst weekends I can remember. I don't know where I'm at or where I'm going anymore, and my legs are about to give out. Crunch has me by the arm, and this ridiculous costume is heavy with sweat.

I got pulled out of bed in my underwear at seven in the morning. It's like everybody has a key to my room now. And I thought she said eight, which would have meant a precious thirty minutes more of fitful unconsciousness. Captain Fuckface - yeah, that's your new name, Crunch; Fuckface for short - was yelling in my ear the entire time about how out of shape I was and something about fighting spirit. I think I pulled off my transformation before anybody else saw me. Knew I should have splurged for some pajamas last month.

She corralled me into that gymnasium from yesterday for her "training regimen" or whatever it was. There were some other people there, and I think one of them might have been that person who kept taking my lunch the first week I transferred in. Maybe not, whatever, not important. Fuckface put some weighted bands on my arms and legs that I still haven't had the chance to take off yet. The things chafe.

She said we'd start with some cardio, which would "ignite your passion into a roaring blaze that would burn away the fat." Which has to be the dumbest speech I've ever heard. I spent hours punching and kicking at the air and prancing around like an idiot, among other things I'd actually -want- to forget. For instance, she told me to hit her, making this the first time since grade school I punched someone, and then laughed about being right about some inane thing when I struck her in the face. And again. And again. My knuckles were bleeding by the time she said we were done, and she had to bandage them up. I didn't see so much as a bruise on her for my efforts. Fuckface must have a head full of rocks.

Finally, live weapons training. Who in their right mind gives an office worker a sword twice their height? Fuckface isn't in her right mind, and I nearly lost my arms trying to hold that thing when she handed it to me. It dropped about three feet and made a crater where it landed. That's not natural. I grabbed a spear off the rack just to get things over with and made a bunch of half-hearted stabs at her, which were easily blocked - it feels weird, trying to hit somebody with a weapon you know might injure them. This pissed her off and she slapped me with her deadweight weapon. It hurts to turn my head now. I doubt she even noticed.

And apparently this wasn't enough for good ol' Captain Fuckface. Because now she says I gotta do some kind of "courage test", which sounds like haunted house nonsense. Right now we're going down some staircase lined with a bunch of heads mounted on the wall. Skulls, grief seed casts, other tacky things that I just can't bring myself to care about. Couldn't I at least get some more water first? I keep coughing up phlegm, and the sweat stings at my eyes. My sleeve's soaked in the stuff to the point that it hurts even worse to rub my eyes. I can't understand much of what Fuckface's saying at the moment, from my heart thumping so loud in my ears. Something about pride and a psych profile. Probably hers.

Diagnosis : Completely batshit. Treatment : Leaving me alone or just killing me already. Please stop stringing me along. Please.

Right now I can't tell if I'm more tired or angry about all this. Whatever they're trying to do, I wish they'd get it over with.

Nope.
Nope nope nope nope nope nope nope nope nopity nope nope nope. No. No way, no how, nuh uh. Fuck this. Fuck everything. I am gone. I am so fucking gone. Forget what I said, I am not doing this and she can't make me. I stagger past her as quickly as my legs can hobble, and I can see Fuckface just smiling at me like the raging psycho she is. Everything aches dully under the rush of adrenaline that is keeping me upright. Even my head's throbbing, for once not from the buzz of corruption in my soul gem, but otherwise my senses are crystal clear. Fuck all this, I'll try living on the street or maybe complain to the warmaster that her rank leader is such a fuckface that she-

I bump into something that knocks me back down onto the ground. It didn't feel like a wall, so it means that it's a person. An agonizing turn of my head confirms that, yep, it's another girl, blonde one, wearing a brown dress outfitted with a few yellow ribbons. Staring at me with half-lidded brown eyes and a smile. A crooked smile. A really lewd smile.

...Oh god, have I been surrounded by raging lesbians? I knew it! I fucking knew it!

"Ihihihi, you brought me another tasty morsel, Cap'n?" says New Girl, crouching down over me and wringing her hands. "That's the second in three weeks. You suuuuure do like to spoil me, don't ya?" She's not that close, but over the stench of my own sweat, I can smell something. Perfume, maybe. Don't care, doesn't matter. Still laying down, I try wiggling my legs to propel myself away from her. And run right back into Fuckface, with that loud laugh that screams hot-blooded trouble.

New girl is lifting the hem of her skirt, pretty much confirming my-GODFUCKINGDAMMIT THERE ARE SPIDERS DROPPING OUT OF THE SIDES OF HER SKIRT WHY THE FUCK I CAN'T STOP SCREAMING!

"... seen you around here before. Let me guess, you stole insider secrets... expense of my dear Officio, didn't yoooou? Such a naughty..."

I feel myself being lifted into something. Don't care, doesn't matter. My throat's too raw to scream anymore. Everything is heavy and there's nobody here anymore, yet I can't even move. I try to grab at my soul gem and smash the cursed thing, but my hands are numb and refuse to close around it. The adrenaline rush is gone and everything hurts.

Fine. Fine. It's fine. Everything is fine. I probably deserve all this anyway.

But I'm not going to cry. If there's one thing I learned from my old, starting-to-look-much-better officio, it's not to show emotions to people who're making your life hell. It never helps. It just makes things worse. Don't give them the satisfaction of a reaction.

The bearer of the most understated magical girl costume, besides Checkers back at the old place, comes back from... Somewhere. I try to raise my head and look at her, but it's really painful. Goddammit, she saw, didn't she. This sadistic thing saw me cringe and it made her smile again. She's actually humming.

Don't care about it. Don't care about anything. Just stop feeling anyth-

Her hands are clamped around my head. Is this it? Is she gonna snap my neck? Do I finaFUCKTHATHURTS. I hiss in pain without even realizing it at first as she twists my head around to face her. And then releases her hold.

...The kink in my neck is gone. Don't have much time to ponder this epiphany before she shoves something into my trembling hands. It's a clear plastic water bottle, with the sports cap open. I'm thinking... trap of some kind. Lull me into a false sense of security. Or something like that. Besides, I can't get a good grip on the thing with my hands as they are.
"Oops, lemme get that for ya', sweetie," says creepy girl who has her hands on mine and is pushing the bottle into my mouth. And tipping it back until I'm forced to swallow. At least it tastes like water. Cold, refreshing, life-giving water. Maybe it's poisoned. Wouldn't be the first time. My head's getting light, so maybe... No it's because I'm holding my breath. She lets it fall to the ground and I'm sitting back gasping for air.

Come to think of it, those spiders from before are gone. Not on the floor, not on the ceiling, not under the chair. Just... Gone.

"...gonna be tortured..." I murmur, then scowl at blurting out what I was thinking. And she's laughing again. Real funny, you psycho.

"Now why in worrrrld would I wanna do somethin' like that to somebody so -adorable-~?" comes yet another response with unfortunate implications from blondie. I shudder involuntarily as she puts her hands on my shoulders and rubs. I can't help squirming a little; Goddammit, get off of me, Tarzan, I don't swing that way. And stop humming.

"Anyhoooo, from what Cap'n Crunch tells me, it doesn't sound like you've done any crime, other than being cute enough to eat right up," she giggles, "and while she means well, she doesn't seem to have the best grasp of how to help people." I just nod along, waiting for all of this to be over and feeling to return to my legs. Once I can walk on my own I'm going to head back to my room and take a long, hard look at my life.

"Ihihihi, speaking of grasp, I've got my hands all over ya' and haven't even introduced myself. Where are my manners?" Finally drab girl lets go, my shoulders sagging and no longer twitchy. She moves around in front of me and curtsies, grinning.

"Suzi Berry, anti-vindicare and keeper of the Spider Room. You can call me Suzi, though." She's probably gonna ask for my name next.

"...Eleanor," I rasp, coughing phlegmatically afterwards. Sooner I can leave, the better. Fortunately, Suzi seems to pick up on my eagerness to not be here anymore.

"The rooftop's a safe place to hide until Cap'n gets bored of lookin' for ya," she explains. For the second time today I'm pulled along by somebody to a location I've never visited before. I have an easier time walking than I did before, but it still hurts like a bitch. "And some fresh air in the flower gardens will do ya a world of good."

I nod along to placate her. Whatever you say. Just leave me wherever and leave me alone.

Away from paperwork.

"...Where're the spiders?"

Away from incubators.

"Ihihihi, I can't tell you that until you've gotten me dinner and a movie first, Ellyyyy~."

I'm going to do a huge cast pic for thread 200.

I'm going to draw everyone featured in this pic + maybe 10 to 15 other 'core' characters. Let me know who you'd like to see.

Obvious contenders:
- dildos, braids, and mecha-McMurderface
- Kirika and Oriko...?

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 04/13/14(Sun)08:31 No.31446138

You look down at the still-bowing, still-apologizing NECO, keeping your expression firmly neutral, if not your usual dour look - before shaking your head. No, you tell her. She hasn't apologized to you yet. At least, not in the way that satisfies you.

"W-what?! B-but I already said sorry, n-nya...w-what else do you want from me?" It's here that the thieving cat journalist shrinks back, hugging herself, both arms crossed over her breasts. "UNYA! A-are you gonna make me apologize with my body, nya?!"

...No. What? Where the hell did she get something like that from? You don't...what?

"Miracle Midori x Murder Mayumi, Volume 2, Chapter Five. Murder Mayumi defeats Sword Sakura by breaking her sword in half in three pages, and taking her to the hot springs for an apology," Noriko immediately chimes in from the sideline, flawlessly and confidently.

When she notices you blinking at her, it's here that her voice falls back into its usual whimpering stutter as she blushes furiously. "U-um, it was really hot, a-and Green Green really went into detail with the ropes and stuff--"

Ropes? Hot springs? What the hell has that got to do with anything--

>> ☐ Deculture 04/13/14(Sun)08:32 No.31446144

>>31446138

"Oh, yeah, I remember that, nya." NECO interrupts, nodding sagely. "I really think it was the volume that Green Green really hit her stride with her art and storytelling. She still had a few rough spots in regards to framing and architecture, but I really think it's one of the stronger volumes out of the series by far--"

No! Fuck no! You shake your head here, gritting your teeth, forcing yourself not to rip your hair out or send a few rounds hurtling into the air with your Desert Eagle in rage and frustration. You're not going to make NECO fucking apologize with her body!

"And why not, nya?!" NECO suddenly snaps, eyes aflame, both hands on her hips. "I'm just as shapely as your cherished Titties McRamenButt, nya!" She throws her shoulders back, thrusting her chest out, stretching the front of her hoodie even more. "I'm probably bigger than her by a few inches if we compare, nya!"

You look at her otherwise impressive display, before reaching up to pinch the bridge of your nose under your glasses. No. That's...no. You're not even remotely interested.

You just...you just want your proper apology. For fuck's sake.

"Oh." NECO blinks at you, before covering up her chest again, and you blink as she has the temerity to blush here. "W-well, I--"

"YOU HEARD HER! APOLOGIZE! NOW!" Noriko shrieks again, and NECO immediately shrinks back, crouching to embrace her legs and protect them from any shin-kicks. "And make sure you mean it!"

"Okay! Okay! Fine!" NECO goes on all fours in front of you - pausing momentarily to unsling her camera and place it on the floor beside her - and it's here that she presses her forehead to the carpeted floor. "Please forgive this lowly peasant, Matsuda-sama-nya! I was only trying to uphold the freedom of the press and the right of the people to know-nya!"

"HARDER! MORE APOLOGIZING!" Noriko runs up to NECO's side and nudges her leg with the toe of her shoe.

"You are really gonna get it later-nya..." The thieving cat growls threateningly, before pressing her face into the carpet again. "A-and I'm sorry for taking a picture of your first kiss with Titties McRamenbutt, nya!"

...Well. Seems that NECO is really making an effort to apologize. Or at least, with motivation from Noriko.

Has everyone forgotten what Neco is doing for us? She's playing both sides of the fence and feeding us the good info. But for that to work she needs to be able to publish things about us that would seem like shit we would not want published. Then work our way up to compromising her journalistic integrity to lead our foes astray with information that is straight up false. People need to be able to believe it.

Who gives a shit if we are seen with Noriko? It's nothing worse than what was aired at the concert.

Actually, the fact that Noriko hangs around with NECO is probably her best defence, behind the fact that she has two very capable magical girls for sisters.

I'd imagine that NECO's "unofficial "safety" agreements with Koobs serve as a convienient way for them to task an MG or two to keep an eye on Noriko.

Hopefullly she learned something about the futility of vengeance, though. And the slimy fuck she killed will serve as a warning about fucking with the Magical Girls of the Ninth's family.

If we have to pay a price for that one, that seems like one worth paying.

You let NECO stay in that position for a few more moments longer - before finally reaching down to help her up. She glances at your proferred hand suspiciously, as if anticipating your suddenly yanking it away just as she reaches for it - but she grabs hold anyway, and you haul her back onto her feet.

...Huh, fancy that. She's almost the same weight as Midori. Maybe just a bit lighter, but definitely similar.

"Thanks, Matsuda-sama-nya~ It was really gettin' weird just stayin' like that." The thieving cat journalist grins at you, not letting go of your hand. In fact, she even embraces your entire arm, and you blink at the sensation of one of your limbs being sandwiched by two warm, soft objects. "Hah, you're not really that noodly anymore, nya! Is this what training with Sayapyon does?!" She gives your bicep a squeeze. " Check out that definition, nya! It's like steel! I'll have to update my material on you, nya--"

You tug your arm free of NECO's grasp, making the thieving cat pout. ...You were NEVER noodly, dammit.

Anyway. You hope that she learned something here, and that she doesn't forget it.

"What, about not takin' pictures of important people even if they hate it?" NECO blinks at you incredulously. "But that's what journyalism is all about, nya--"

No. That's stupid. It's about keeping the promises you make to your friends.

NECO blinks at you again - and you find yourself wondering if she'll counter that by pointing out your hypocrisy, as there's a chance she knows THAT much - but instead she hangs her head, before nodding.

"O-oh. Yeah. Yeah, I get it, Matsuda-sama. I won't forget that. 'Specially not for sweaty, greasy Noriko-chan here." She turns towards Noriko, a guilty grin on her face. "Sorry."

"It's...it's okay." Noriko murmurs quietly, nodding. "A-and I'm not that sweaty. N-not any longer, anyway."

At first we were told that all of the Ninth's Culexus except Omegon were wiped out when Kharn witched out for a second time.
But later on Sallaka told us it was Walpurgisnacht who did it.

Well, which one should we take as canon?

Since this is something that became a point of discussion and it's not really spoiling anything/was probably just poorly conveyed on my part: this anon has it right, along with a sort of baseless disgust with otaku culture, Iori being a brat with control issues suddenly costarring with someone who might be more famous (and popular, and controlling) than she is, and her being generally insecure in her life right now. "Well, anyway!" NECO cheerfully remarks as she picks up her camera, pulling the sling over her head once more. "Can't say this hasn't been fun-nya, even if it got a bit weird, but I've got a really juicy interview to get to, and--" She abruptly halts in mid-sentence, blinking at you. "Uh, Matsuda-sama-nya...?"

What? You return her confused look with a glare of your own, over your Journal. Underlining your discovery about the thieving cat and her 'filthy assistant', before closing the small black book with a snap. What's wrong now? You were just updating your journal, that's all. Is she going to want to spread rumors about that too?

"Uh...not really, nya?" NECO shakes her head, still confused - before smiling again. For a cat you have absolutely no reason to distrust, this smile of hers actually looks...well, pretty. Until she opened her mouth and started talking again. "It's kinda cute the way you get really focused on it, though, nya! Like a kid who sucks at Math but tries her best to solve her homework on her own, hee hee~"

...It's just stuff you want to make sure you don't forget, that's all, you grumble as you thrust the book back into your Inventory. Things important to you.

"Oh? I wonder what's in it!" NECO insinuates herself close to you again. "Wouldn't it be such a scoop if everyone found out you were just writing Titties McRamenButt's name again and again with hearts all over? Hey, hey, gimme a peek! Gimme--hey, wait, nya! I'm not done with Matsuda-sama-nya!"

It's here that NECO suddenly moves away from you - and you blink to see Noriko pushing her friend from behind, towards the door leading out of the backstage area. Her face red and her cheeks puffed out, straining with every step as she pushed the taller, heavier girl away from you.

"Go. Just go already, you'll m-miss your...interview," Noriko grunts, very clearly out of breath at the effort. "Thank...thank you for coming and showing your support...!"

NECO shakes her head, her usual smirk on her face as she allows herself to be pushed out the door. "Nya know, you're lucky we're best friends, you know that?"

"I...know! And you're really lucky...I'm your best friend, too!"

"Heh." NECO looks back at you, waving goodbye. "See you, Matsuda-sama-nya! Let's have that interview soon, okay?! I'll have my people get in touch with your people-nya!"

...Right. As if you'll ever subject yourself to something like that.

With the cat safely out of the premises, Noriko comes running back to you, sweating a great deal more than she was earlier - but with a satisfied look on her face. "R-really...really sorry about that, Matsuda-san. Tetsuo-san c-can be annoying, but she's one of my friends, a-and she really believes in...what she does." She wipes her forehead with her sleeve, and you force yourself not to wince at the large damp spot basically making her costume stick to her arm. "J-just like I do."

Well, there's nothing wrong with that, really, you respond. Everyone should believe in whatever they do.

That said, if you're going to be a dildo and believe in being a dildo, then everyone is going to see you as a dildo.

Noriko blinks at this, before nodding. "I...I guess so..."

A comfortable, if slightly awkward silence settles in between the both of you. The kind of awkward silence shared between...well, kindred spirits.

What do you do now?

[]Ask her if things are really okay with her and her sisters.
[]Say goodbye, and make your way back to the Officio. See if Kyuubey has anything else to do for you for the day.

Ruri was at least personable when we told her 'No'. And didn't explode into hyperventilating temper tantrums over petty shit like Iori did.

We haven't really met any other Idols, or at least not spent enough time with them to make a judgement.

Unless we count Kyouske in his Krauser-form, but he was a bro so what the fuck ever.

You let the silence persist for a few moments more before breaking it - clearing your throat and saying that you need to go. Tomorrow's another day at the office, and it's looking to be as busy as it was today. You had fun, though, really you did. You still don't understand idols and their fans, but you had fun.

"O-oh, I understand, Matsuda-san." Noriko nods, smiling. "I'm...I'm really happy you came to see the show, even if it was just the l-latter half..." She brings out the boxed figure you signed earlier, hugging it to her chest.

"Matsuda-san coming to watch me perform, it...it felt that it was okay, that no one else from my family wanted to see my concert." She giggles here, a strange, strangled sound seemingly coming from her nose. "I-I mean, I know at least one of them would've tried to watch, but she's just really busy where she is, so..."

...Ah. Well...yeah. That's...hnn.

You have no idea what to say here, so you make up for your silence by patting her on the head again.

The promises you make, really. One of them is going to see you dead someday, either by the person you made them to or by your own hand.

After an equally-awkward goodbye, you leave Noriko backstage, to be surrounded once more by her adoring public.

You return Mami's bike to the Ninth Officio Headquarters' parking lot, before having yourself ferried back to your apartment via a chauffered company car. Kyuubey did give you the rest of the day off, so you may as well settle in early and have an early night. If they need you, they can certainly just call you up and drag you back into your office.

As you make your way through your floor - strolling quickly past your neighbors - it's here that you notice that the door to your apartment is slightly ajar. As if someone had stepped in, and foregot to shut it close all the way. By what you can see from under the door, the inside of your apartment is completely unlit, with not a single light turned on.

Your eyes go wide the very slightest bit as a wave of deja vu washes over you.

An innate sense of something being very horribly wrong behind Door Number One.

Muffled screaming coming from the inside, interrupted by concussive blasts of force.

The stench of blood and gore festering in your lungs as you step inside, a cold gun grasped firmly in your hands.

Finding someone you love grievously wounded and fighting for her life.

...No. No.

Not now. Not when things were going alright.

[]Calm down. Midori just probably forgot to shut the door. A silly mistake you'll have to scold her about, but nothing more than that. No need to be a dildo - just step into your apartment and call out her name like a regular jackoff.
[]Get a gun and prepare to charge in, ready to kill. If you're lucky, Midori may still be alive when you get to her.

Laziness is a part of it, yes, but if I'm not at work, or drawing, I'm usually rotting my brain with some videogame or other, trying to forget about work... so write-ups are usually at the bottom of the priority list unless one is pointed out as particularly good.

Hahaha, well, I'm really not sure about the quality of ideas. Generally they pitch ideas for their writeups and most of the time I like them, and I wonder how I didn't think of them myself to incorporate to MGNQ. This happens a lot, by the way! And instead of just taking these ideas myself, I let them develop it in MGNQ's own universe, so we both learn from each other.

That said I do have to turn down ideas a lot too. Any one of them will attest that I'm really particular about some things, especially when they're dealing with the elements currently being focused on. And I also tell them in advance that their character may die at any time!

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 04/17/14(Thu)07:46 No.31536124

Without even thinking - the entire motion almost reflexive, as if you'd been doing it your whole life, as if it'd been ingrained so deeply in you that to do anything else would take a moment's thought - you tear your Golden Desert Eagle from its holster and level it in front of you. Both your hands cradling the blocky, oversized firearm in a rock-steady grip, ready at a moment's notice to murder anything that moves.

...No. This...this isn't possible. It's just you being paranoid. Whoever's after you - the Prophet, or the Tenth, or even that shadow you saw in the mirror during Haruka's scrying - they couldn't have made their move now. Not when you were still getting your bearings right. Not when you were just getting ready to deal with everything that fucking cat, and Mami, and everyone dumped on your lap and expecting you to fucking smile about it--

You find yourself swallowing hard, and your hold on your gun tightens to a white-knuckled deathgrip as you realize just how fucking wrong you are. No. No, of COURSE this is the perfect time for them to make their move. Oriko sent you that fucking box with the severed head inside just after you settled things with Iori, didn't she? She could just as easily have sent a fucking bomb and killed you, Kumatora, and your favorite bar, that's how low your guard was back then.

Christ, how can you be so stupid? So FUCKING stupid? Here you are, standing in front of your fucking apartment like an idiot, having just waltzed back here thinking that everything's going to be alright, that everything's going to be fine, that MIDORI ISN'T SOMEWHERE INSIDE THERE CUT UP INTO FUCKING PIECES OR WORSE, DYING SLOWLY, DYING PAINFULLY, BLEEDING TO DEATH WHILE CALLING YOUR NAME--

...

You blink your eyes furiously as you realize that you're now hyperventilating, your quickened heartbeat pounding in your ears, almost blocking out all other sound. Gritting your teeth, you will yourself to stay calm, to focus. It's not going to help anyone - you or Midori - if you give in to sheer panic and just storm in with guns blazing. All because you found your fucking apartment door ajar.

Murderface would've done that. But Chiaki Matsuda wouldn't have. Chiaki Matsuda would've done everything in her power to check out the situation first - BEFORE storming in with guns blazing.

Lowering your gun a fraction, it's here that you raise your right hand up to your face, focusing on the active form of your Soul Gem affixed firmly there. Trying to recall Kyuubey's instructions on how to take advantage of your attunement to Midori's own Soul Gem - an attunement that you never really found the opportunity or the need to really put through its paces. You remember enough, at least, to be able to check whether she's alright - and for a brief second you find yourself wondering what you'll do if the result was not something you were willing to accept.

You send a pulse through your connection with Midori, the thought rendered jagged with worry and twisted with desperation. A moment passes without a return, followed by another. Then, another. Your body curling, clenching in tension, getting ready to charge--

[1/2]

>>31536129

The pulse returns just before a mist of red starts to cloud your vision - and you grit your teeth again as you force yourself to calm the fuck down. She's there. She's alive. She's alright. The pulse wouldn't have come back so strongly otherwise, even if it was delayed.

Even with that, though...you still couldn't find it in yourself to holster your gun. Just...something's not right, even with that.

It wouldn't hurt to at least be ready for anything, you tell yourself. You'll just hold it in your hand, your index finger well clear from the trigger guard. If there is anything - and there's probably really nothing to worry about - at least you'll be armed to meet it.

As such, with the Golden Desert Eagle in your grip, you carefully, quietly, push the door to your apartment open. Your free hand quickly finding the light switch near the wall and flipping it on, flooding the living room with light.

What you see almost makes your legs buckle underneath you.

Midori's...there. She's safe. She's...

She's sleeping. Sitting in your chair, her entire body slack, her head resting on the ridiculously-comfortable cushion forming the back and neck support of your comfy throne. And yes, she's breathing - the tight fit of her jacket over her chest makes even the minutest movement there plainly obvious, if her soft snoring didn't already clue anyone else in.

You shake your head here, chuckling faintly to yourself. Midori must've been so tired from her first day being a Callidus Instructor that it was all she could do to drag herself in before she fell into your chair and promptly fell asleep.

>>31536134

It's also here that you notice the bag of groceries stashed beside your chair - cooking ingredients for ramen, you discover after a moment's rifling. She must've been planning on cooking dinner for the both of you, but fatigue stopped that plan cold. Probably forgot about shutting the door properly, too, something you'll have to scold her about.

It's here that you finally shove the Golden Desert Eagle back into its holster, before sinking down into your couch and burying your face in your hands.

...Hah. That was...yeah. You were pretty fucking paranoid there, weren't you? Idiot. Sayaka'd laugh her ass off if she found out about this. Kyoko, too.

Hell, you'd laugh yourself, but that'd probably wake her up.

Christ. Seriously. This Warmaster thing.

Anyway. What do you do now?

[]Wake Midori up. She needs to learn what she did wrong.

I don't think we something like a basic packet of ramen or instant meal stocked. But it was Mami who initially stocked the apartment. Knowing her she would put something easy for us to not fuck up. Like a box of cereal and some Kong, can't fuck that up.

With the door to your apartment closed and locked tight, you decide to let Midori rest. It's...it is pretty late, and you'll lecture her about keeping the door closed whenever she's indoors tomorrow morning. Or whenever you wake up. Just not now - she's sleeping the sleep of the vindicated dead, and you're not that far gone that you'd feel right waking someone up from that.

Kicking off your heels - sending them tumbling across the living room carpet, to jostle against the shoe rack by the door - it's here that you carefully scoop up Midori's slack, snoring form into your arms. She'd be better off sleeping in the master bedroom rather than on your chair - and besides, the way she was sleeping, she'd wake up all stiff and aching. Not something anyone deserves to wake up with in the morning.

As you lift her from your chair and into your arms, it's here that you catch a whiff of her unperfumed scent - a faint note of dried sweat, barely even there, hidden underneath the fruity tang of her hair. Her shampoo, probably. ...Kiwi? It smelled like it. It's...not a bad scent, all told, one you don't really mind at all.

She's warm, too. Even through her clothes and yours, you could feel her body warmth pooling against your own - a soft, comfortable heat against the slight chill of the apartment's climate control. A palpable reminder that you are in fact holding someone in your arms - someone alive, someone vital, and someone...important. Someone who had willingly given themselves to you, even with everything you were, and had decided to stick with you - even with everything you've become.

...Not that you needed reminding, of course. Enhanced Magical Girl upper body strength notwithstanding, Midori's a bit...on the hefty side. Not really that heavy, just that...well, you're more suited to carrying heavy weaponry all day, and not other Magical Girls taller and less noodlier than you. The fact that you're already breathing hard when you finally lay down Midori on the bed in the master's bedroom and draw up the covers around her isn't making you consider asking Yuu tips in strength training at all, oh no.

With you thumping a loose fist against your lower back - every dull impact making you wince in pain - it's here that you plod back to the kitchen, Midori's ramen supplies in hand. After dealing with all the shit of being a Warmaster today, making ramen would be easy, right? You just need to tear open the ingredient and flavor packs, dump everything and the noodles in a pot of boiling water and then call it a day, right? Right.

You dump the contents of the grocery bags on the kitchen countertop, and blink at the unfamiliar shit that you see before you. Raw vegetables, raw meat, condiments you've never heard of, bullion cubes...the only thing you recognize are the dried noodles, and they're in a bigger pack than you've ever seen them in.

What the fucking hell is this?! You don't know how to make ramen with this kind of crap!

You give the ingredients one last look before shoving them into the kitchen refrigerator where they belong. You're not going to even TRY and cook ramen from scratch, that's something beyond your meagre cooking skills. You've never looked at how the noodle dish is made exactly, but you did hear something about having to boil pork bones for an entire day just for the stock alone, and having to chop each ingredients fine enough so they'll add to the flavor instead of just being flotsam in the soup.

...Yeah, no. You can field-strip an expensive rifle in the dark and put it back together using only your teeth, but messing with high-caliber cuisine like that is just out of your league. And you'd like for Midori to wake up to a dinner good enough to actually eat, not throw up into the porcelain bowl moments later.

Taking one of the aprons hanging from a convenient rack of pegs beside the fridge - slipping it on and tying the strings off behind you - it's here that you give the kitchen's supplies a good rummaging, to see if they've got anything that you can work with and make a decent meal out of.

Besides booze, of course. Because booze isn't food.

+ Um...if you'd like, I can help, + Braids' voice chimes in. + I think you've got enough here for hamburger steak, the freezer has ground beef we can easily defrost-- +

Hamburger steak? What is this, kiddy food?

+ I agree. If we must serve the Green one dinner, it must be an adult dish. + Dildoes' arch voice cuts through amidst Braids' stuttering. + Spaghetti would be good. +

That's...that's not really adult, and she already had spaghetti during your date...

+ SALAD. + Murderface growls. + HEALTHY. SALAD. SHE. NEEDS. TO. EAT. HEALTHIER.+

Well. Seems like you can have the three stooges assist you.

Either way, we were lacking in Risa art, and so I provide more Risa. Specifically, Valkyrie Risa because one of the writefags asked for it. Non-canon? Perhaps. We've yet to see the full extent of Risa's powers anyways but I thought her super form would be something like her surrounding her self with the armor made out of hollows/animals she consumed in Mexico/Australia.

Personally, this only half done. I'm still drawing Chiaki summoning her. I'll put the high resolution version on twitter later today (@CometHalaxis)

You consider your options carefully. Hamburger steak does sound like a kid's meal, but at the same time, it's easy to make and probably foolproof enough for you not to screw up. Spaghetti's good, but like you said, she's had it before during your date. Salad's...well, Murderface has her heart in the right place, but it doesn't seem like it's enough of a meal on its own. And pizza...pizza's just you giving up, really.

So yeah. Hamburger steak and salad it is. And they'll help, right? The three stooges won't just ditch you after suggesting those brilliant ideas?

+ Despite my initial disappointment at your insistence of treating the Green one like a child with such selections-- +

+ H-hamburger steak isn't just for k-kids...! +

+ Hush. Like I was saying, if you're that set on making her eat something meant for kids and rabbits, then that's your business, Nameless One. But we will assist you as much as we can. + It's here that Dildoes pauses - and you could swear you could see her flip her hair before continuing. + We have noted that being near the Green one gives you stability, and that's what's important. +

+ PREPARE. TO. COOK. + Murderface's words leaves her scarred throat in a wet leopard growl. + ARM. YOURSELF. +

+ SAME. DIFFERENCE. +

And thus, the three stooges - and yourself - begin to make Midori her dinner. Despite their usual chilly interactions, Dildoes and Braids worked together commendably well to instruct you on making hamburger steak, even so far as agreeing with each other on how much spices to use and just what kind of shape to mold the burger patty into. They agreed on a heart shape, with the sunny side-up fried egg on top also molded in the same way.

Murderface, meanwhile, helped you with the salad. That was easier - it's mostly chopping up vegetables and stuff anyway, although she had you boil a single egg and cut it up for the + PROTEIN +. What didn't help was how she was oddly enthusiastic about telling you how to chop the vegetables up a certain way.

+ NOW. FLAY. THE. LETTUCE. +

+ DISEMBOWEL. THE. TOMATOES. +

+ BEHEAD. THE. CUCUMBERS. DISMEMBER. THEIR. CORPSES. +

...Did she really need to use that kind of language?

+ NO. + Murderface had growled after a moment. + BUT. IT'S. FUN. +

After a good hour and a half, your home-made dinner - or Murderdinner, as the three stooges dubbed it - was done. The Murderburger's a bit toasted around the edges, but it's still juicy and smelled delicious. The Murdersalad also looked palatable for rabbit food, and Murderface had insisted that you pour the dressing into a seperate saucer for dipping instead of mixing - as overdressing was a good way to ruin the overall healthiness of the dish itself.

All in all, not bad for your first time. It's not restaurant quality, that's for sure, but it's something you wouldn't mind eating yourself.

+ Wake her up now, so she can eat it before it gets cold, + Dildoes chides you, and it's here that all three voices fade into silence.

Right. Sure. Yeah.

You walk back into the master bedroom, wiping your hands on your apron, and it's here that you see Midori sleeping on the bed, just as you left her. ...Or not.

Actually, it looks like she'd woken up just now, figured out what was happening, and had dropped back to bed, pretending to be asleep. For one, she's breathing a bit more quickly than before, and it looks like she's trying not to smile.

What do you do to wake up your 'sleeping' Callidus?

My only complaint with this is that Risa's tails look mangy and greasy rather than impeccably fluffy. They're probably the only part of Risa thats actually pleasant to touch. And her fingertips and toes are too soft. They're supposed to be clawed, for clawing people in the face. And she's supposed to lose the mask in her released state, according to the pastebin. So I guess thats three things, instead of one thing.

Other than that it looks fucking amazing. God damn.

You shake your head here, and you make to call her out on her bad acting, when a better idea strikes you. Walking up and leaning over Midori's prone form on the bed, it's here that you place a small kiss on her forehead - something that she immediately stiffens at, her entire body twitching in response. You don't give her time to relax here, as you move to whisper into her ear something you've read in her own manga, back during the flight to Siberia. A line that was muttered deadpan by Murder Mayumi herself.

"Evening, Miracle Midori. What would you like first? Dinner, murder...or me?"

It has its intended effect - Midori's cheeks blushing, turning a cherry red, along with her ears, and it's here that she slowly - very slowly - grabs the covers and pulls it over her head, all without opening her eyes. You shake your head again, before taking the covers yourself and throwing them back in one quick movement, making the Callidus half-shriek, half-giggle in surprise and astonishment.

"S-sempai...!" Midori squeaks, still blushing. "I, um, I can explain--"

"I made dinner," You murmur, cutting her off. "Eat it before it gets cold. I'm not making you another one if it does." Well, of course you're not going to. You'll probably just re-heat the first one, there's a microwave after all.

Sitting up on the bed, still flustered but with an embarrassed smile on her face, Midori nods. "I...I know, sempai. I kind of woke up after you put me here, and...I heard you talking." It's here that she blinks. "Um, who were you talking to? It sounded like you were having a conversation in the kitchen...is Kyoko-san here? Did you ask her for help?"

How do you respond?

[]It's complicated. You're better off not knowing.
[]Ignore the question, drag her to the dining table by the hand. She can talk all she wants while she's eating the dinner you made for her.

You open your mouth to reply here, but close it with a frown, instead grabbing Midori by the hand and dragging her bodily out of the bed. The green-haired Callidus squeaks your title again, breathlessly this time, and you hear her stumbling behind you as you pull her out of the master bedroom, down the hall and into the kitchen. Where your own culinary masterpiece has been painstakingly plated and laid out on the dining table.

Still keeping a firm hold on her hand - doing your best to ignore just how soft and warm she felt in your grip - you haul her to her chair, forcing her to sit down, before gesturing with your free hand to the food. After a moment of the both of you looking at each other, you let go of her hand and gesture to the food AGAIN, for emphasis.

"Hamburger steak and...and salad, sempai?" Midori's eyes go wide, and the surprised smile on her face is nothing short of dazzling. "I...you made all of this, for me? By yourself?"

That should be obvious, yes. No one else is here to cook for her except you, and you're not wearing this apron for your health. And she can plainly see the mess of unwashed pots and pans cooling in the sink, along with the mess in the kitchen countertop of vegetable peels and all the other crap.

But anyway. Yes, you made her dinner. On your own.

...Getting help from your past selves still count as doing it on your own, right?

"It...I can't believe it, sempai. It looks...everything looks delicious." Midori shakes her head, still grinning. A moment later, and she squeals, one hand clamping over her mouth. "Eee, t-the hamburger steak and the egg, it's shaped like--"

Like a heart, yes. The egg was particularly challenging to do. You had to rifle through the baking supplies and cheat using a cookie cutter mold.

"I...it's like that bento you got me, sempai..." Midori is positively squirming in her seat, now. "I-I don't think I could eat it, it's too cute--"

...You've talked about this before. If she doesn't eat, she'll get sick. And it'll get cold and you'll have to throw it away, so it'll go to waste otherwise.

"B-but--"

EAT.

"Okay, okay!" Midori giggles, relenting. "Anything you say, sempai. Just...um, allow me to..." It's here that she takes her smartphone from her jacket pocket, and points it towards her food. A click and a simulated sound of a camera lens whirring shut, and the green-haired Callidus grins. "Got it!"

...What? Did she just take a picture of her food? What the fuck ever for?

"Just to make sure I don't forget, sempai, even after it's gone." Midori grins at you, cheeks still red. "S-sorry. I just...it's the first time that...that sempai actually went out of her way to make me a meal. N-not just buying me one, but actually cooking for me." She shakes her head once more, before bowing shyly in thanks. "So...thank you, sempai."

Silence. Awkward silence.

Well, she...she should thank you after she tastes it, at least. You didn't taste-test it yourself, so there's a chance it actually tastes terrible.

And what is she waiting for again, exactly? It's getting cold!

This feeling. What is it?

Is it happiness?

No, you shake your head.

That's probably just indigestion or something. You had to eat your first failed burger, and that one wasn't cooked all the way through. Urgh.

You take a seat beside Midori as she takes her first bite of the burger - and you grind your teeth together as she chews her mouthful carefully, with the air of a particularly particular gourmet.

Her eyes widen, and she looks at you. "I-it's good, sempai! This is...this tastes exactly like hamburger steak should taste like!"

Your own eyes follow suit behind your glasses. R-really...? They don't taste like shit or rotten flesh or anything?

"N-no! It's...it's a bit on the peppery side, and the sides are a bit crispy, but other than that it tastes great! T-the egg's cooked the right way too, with the gooey yolk soft but not raw!" Midori starts to dig in with gusto. "T-thank you, sempai! I didn't really get to eat lunch because of training, so this is just...!"

You shake your head. If she's going to eat, she should eat. If she's going to talk, talk. But not at the same time.

"R-right! Please excuse me, sempai...!"

You find yourself smiling, leaning forward with your elbows on the table as you watch Midori eat the dinner you made for her. With your own two hands. She's even eating the Murdersalad, dipping the forked vegetables like Murderface herself predicted she would. Complimenting you on how juicy and fresh the ingredients are, and how the dressing - a fruity vinagrette - is refreshing with the salty savoriness of the hamburger.

Anyway, seems like this is a good time for some conversation with your Callidus. You haven't seen her all day, and you...well. You missed her.

That's one instance, while in all other instances of Chiaki talking with the souls in the GW, it was all pulsed and silent.

So it's more likely that most of the times we talked with the Three Stooges, that it was pulsed.
Especially since Pinky gave no indication that she knew we had already talked with them when she appeared at the beginning of the Big Shell mission.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Chiaki

Hanegawa I'm not too sure about, but I know that the similarly named Monogatari character's name, 羽川, could be read as Hanegawa. The characters mean 'feather" and "river". There are probably other ways to read and write it.

Midori as a name is, to my knowledge, always written in hiragana. As we all know, it means green. There's a kanji that means green and is read as Midori, but I've not seen it used as a name.

I think that's getting into the territory of mashing kanji together and making up your own reading, but it's not like that doesn't happen all the time in Japanese media.

末堕
末 matsu meaning "the end"
堕 from the first character of 堕落 (daraku, depravity/corruption) read as da.

Very unusual, I don't think it's a name/reading you'd ever see in real life, and it's a little bit tryhard.

>> ☐ lolwut !b.UtT..... 04/17/14(Thu)13:29 No.31540582

>>31540276
Names are one of those weird places where the readings can get totally wild, so you don't necessarily have to worry about keeping everything neat and tidy.

Matsuda, for example, can be anything from >matsu

https://en.wiktionary.org/wiki/Category:Japanese_kanji_read_as_まつ >da
https://en.wiktionary.org/wiki/Category:Japanese_kanji_read_as_だ almost literally any combination of these. (this probably doesn't distinguish between on'yomi (japanese from chinese), kun'yomi (native japanese) and all sorts of other weird sorts of potential readings that may or may not be kosher for common use in proper japanese naming tradition.

Chiaki is almost certainly going to be written as 千秋.

Not only is that one of the more common writings of the actual given name itself, but 千秋 can also be read "senshū", meaning "a thousand years".

I said that I think Chiaki would write "Matsuda" in kanji and "Chiaki" in hiragana. Then Hat called out that Mami might have penciled in Chiaki in kanji. This started my shadowruns and I assumed Hat meant that Mami would choose some obscure kanji with a deeper meaning. Then some anon said it's unusual to have a name written in anything other than kanji and I corrected him by pointing out Mami's own given name is written in katakana, i.e. I don't think she'd have anything against Chiaki's first name just being written in hiragana.

I think the chain of replies got confused somewhere.

I said it would be unusual if the name was -completely- in -hiragana-. I was thinking that since Chiaki only communicated her name verbally.. Mami would have needed to make the entire thing up. (though Chiaki totally could have written it down offscreen for her later, or just not give a damn.)

Now that I'm looking more closely at this, I think the intended use of this reading as "the end" isn't "the stopping point of", but rather "the last vestiges of". Which would, rather than meaning "the corruption stops here", probably end up being closer to "we've pretty much used up all the corruption at this point; guess we've got nowhere to go but up."

Also somewhat fitting, but not quite as inspirational.

If you wanted more inspirational, you'd probably go with 末沱 (末 meaning "the end of"/"the last vestiges of" and 沱 meaning "flowing of tears"/"sorrow".)

That said, it's far more likely that regular-type Matsuda (松田) just got used rather than Murderface hitting the books to try and figure out a symbolic reading for her surname.

~~Also the same as the car company, but fuck it.~~

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 04/18/14(Fri)08:23 No.31556336

You ask Midori about her day as you rummage inside your shield for a cigarette. How was it, then, her first foray into being an instructor for the Ninth's Callidus? Did anyone give her any trouble? Did the trainees behave while being taught by Midori-sensei?

At this, Midori blushes, ducking her head slightly at the title. "N-no one's started calling me that yet, sempai," She murmurs after swallowing her current mouthful. "But it was...it was actually better than I expected! I mean, I'm not teaching formally yet, I'm sort of Karasawa-san's teaching assistant for a few weeks, until I get the hang of things. And she's really friendly - she made sure that the trainees addressed me the same way as they do her, and made them introduce themselves to me, so I'm familiar with them off the bat."

You nod as you light your cigarette, making sure to breathe the smoke far and way from Midori and her dinner. That sounds helpful of the Callidus Rank Leader, you remark after a moment. You'll have to thank her for it sometime.

Midori looks back down at her food, studiously cutting apart the burger steak into neat, tidy squares. Displaying a rather curious skill with her knife, as if she'd had some experience using one.

>>31556336

"She did have to leave around halfway through the training day, sempai, for a...personal reason, I think? That's what she said, anyway. She left me with the entire trainee class and the rest of the lesson plan for the day." The green-haired Callidus looks up at you here, smiling.

"Honestly, I was nervous the whole time, ordering them around like that, b-but everyone walked up to me after dismissal and told me how they liked me as a sub!" Her smile becomes dazzling, lighting up the very room you're in. "I can't...I can't thank you enough for letting me do this, sempai. Really."

Sounds like Midori's fitting in well as an instructor, then. While you would have preferred her to be your secretary - she'd have been close to you at all times - her being an instructor seems to fit her better. She certainly sounds like she's enjoying herself.

"Ah, how...how did your mission go, sempai?" Midori asks after a slight lull in the conversation. "I...Mami-san told me that sometimes I can't ask about them, or that you can't answer, so...if you can't, that's fine." She smiles here, but it's a bit of a tense smile - as if she'd been waiting all day to ask this question, her eyes surreptitiously checking you out. For injuries, maybe? You're not sure. "I'm...I'm just glad you got back here safely."

How do you respond?

[]Tell her it went fine, turn the conversation back to her. Ask more about her day.
[]"Nothing I'm not used to. I did get to see Sayaka cut a giant robot in half, though."

You lean back on your chair, considering the burning tip of your cigarette for a moment before replying. The mission was...well, it wasn't anything spectacular or anything worth talking about. It wasn't anything you weren't used to, for one - if Kyuubey wasn't sending you out to kill someone, it was usually to secure something from someone else.

...That said, you did get to see Sayaka cut a giant robot in half, so there was that.

Midori's eyes widene at this, very nearly spitting out the iced water she'd been sipping. "A...a giant robot, sempai? You're...you're kidding, right? I mean, I know Sayaka-san is really good with a sword, but a giant robot--"

You shake your head, here. You don't kid around when it comes to missions. That really happened - including your having to fight off Magical Girls from another Officio with a one-armed and one-legged Kyoko hanging from your back.

Midori's only reply here is wordless, rapt silence - and you take that as a cue for you to elaborate further. Lighting another cigarette and grinding out your previous one into an ashtray that your Callidus herself had to run to another room briefly to fetch for you, you begin to recount just what happened during the off-shore op. With Midori listening to your every word as she ate.

You're not an idiot, though. You conveniently forgot to bring up your letting yourself get captured so Sayaka could go around the base killing shit and breaking stuff.

Your interrogation, your being tortured, your being kneecaped twice with your captor laughing about it - you'd have committed any sin, any atrocity, just to make sure that you didn't have to see Midori's worry-stricken face ever again, and if what it took was to simply lie or omit what happened to you during the off-shore op, then you'd gladly do it.

Besides, it wasn't like it hurt or anything. Much.

When you finish, Midori had also finished her Murderburger steak - and was now working on her Murdersalad. "I...honestly, sempai, that mission sounds amazing. D-dangerous, yes, but amazing. Is...are missions from the Ninth always like that? It sounds more like an action movie than just a typical smash and grab...!"

You shrug. You're not so sure yourself. It's probably because Kyuubey likes to take high-profile missions, the kind that'd be big enough to guarantee some sort of Magical Girl opposition. As a result, it gets a bit crazy, with all this magic and tech being thrown around as both sides try to kill each other for their main objective. But she's right about it being dangerous - you never really know who you could be facing off against.

You shake your head at the memory of Freon. Crazy Sixteenth Officio bitch, thinking that the Golden Weapons were such a fucking great idea. You hoped that your beating her to death with her own arms changed her mind about that, but something tells you that it didn't.

"Ah, I...I see." Midori smiles at you, after swallowing the mouthful of salad she'd been chewing for a while. "Well, I'm...I'm just glad you're back safe from it, sempai. I wish..." She looks down at her food for a brief moment, before looking back up, eyes staring into yours. "I wish I could've been there with you, sempai. ...To help out, and stuff."

How do you respond?

Whether or not she was forced to, she still experienced the reality of her actions. She knows how dark MG jobs get, and she needs to get used to it somehow, some way. Otherwise, it's that much easier for Chiaki to go full Noir paranoia like last thread and someday be right. Taking all the burden isn't fair either.

Also, Hiding it from her is the same as closing a part of yourself, and I for one don't think that leads to healthy relationships. Don't sugarcoat things, and all that. But what do I know about relationships?

Depends. That's why she can tell her about Sayaka cutting a robot in half, but not about her time in the silent room with Freon. But the amount of information you can divulge becomes reduced the farther away your specialties lie in the workplace. If you work on the exact same stuff, by all means you can take your work home. Even work on it together to improve stability in the relationship. Bullshit about the things the happened at work or the people you had to deal with. But I see their stations as far enough apart that there needs to be some distance there.

It also depends on the dynamic of the individuals. One might be fine with talking about what happened at work to fill in the time, the other might just want to leave everything related to work at work.

You blink at this. Well...you were really hoping that you wouldn't ever have to take Midori to a mission, ever. It's something you'd decided upon, after making sure she got a position that'd get her out of the active roster and into something that'd keep her busy, and at the same time confine her to Headquarters.

It's not that you were possessive, or anything, or even being over-protective. If you were still just a rank-and-file Vindicare who didn't have to worry about where and when the next Golden Weapon-boosted freak would gun for you - then you'd have taken Midori along to every op you'd get. Even the ones that didn't need or call for a Callidus. But you don't have that kind of luxury anymore. You're Warmaster now, and on a fetch quest to collect all twenty Golden Weapons so that no one else has to deal with them BUT you.

Oh, and probably kill a crazed, insane Goddess with them, too. If Pinky doesn't get bored and core you out like a fucking apple.

Your reflex, here, then, is to tell her no. To shut her down completely, decisively and utterly that she wouldn't even think of asking again. But...Christ, you can't say no to someone who just wants to help. Moreso if that person's actually Midori. Someone who saved you even when she had absolutely no reason to.

You reply, then, with a cautious 'Maybe'. Maybe, in the sense that you'll definitely keep her in mind for the next op, and if you believe the op itself will run much more smoothly with a capable Callidus on board. Proper tools for the proper task and all that. Besides, you still have to work on your teamwork with Sayaka and Kyoko. Well - more the former than the latter, really. You're still not sure you can handle working with the Eversor for long periods of time, before you start wanting to kill each other.

Yeah. That's...yeah. You return her smile as best you can, grinding out your now-spent cigarette into the ashtray, just as you start to reduce your new one into ashes.

Yeah. Its easy to forget that very little time has passed "in-world", since its been ages since the Siberia threads.

Still, I hope Midori talks about that soon. If we learn about the fragments and especially the winged fragment, we can probably figure out who should be in that empty mirror in our DEagle and ask the three stooges about that incarnation.

We could probably convince Midori to speak freely earlier by telling about the DEagle Homuras, but Pinky is probably listening.

So, neat things we can do because of ourlink to Midori's Soul: Pulse, track her instantly, take over her body, break illusions and it also has a kill switch.

So in theory, there might be a situation where Chiaki could do to Midori what the three stooges do to us, and take over to say use a sniper rifle to shoot something that Midori could never hit on her own.

Not sure where else it would come in handy. Hmm, can we do it partially? That is to say, see through Midoris eyes without controlling her? Thats something that could be very usefull considering Midori is a callidus and more stealth/spy-type.

You let Midori finish the rest of her meal in peace and quiet. You've never really been good at this small talk stuff, but you think you did decently for your first time, here. No one's trying to kill you - more or less - and the meal didn't end prematurely with someone getting up from their seat and storming off in a huff, their appetite completely ruined.

There are still some questions you'd like to ask, of course - namely, about what Midori experienced in Siberia, when she dove into that overlapping Barrier to rescue you - but it's something you can leave for some other time, really. No need to harsh her first day buzz by dredging up something like that.

After some time of watching Midori struggle her way through her Murdersalad - with you encouraging her to finish it by threatening that you'll never cook for her again if she doesn't - the green-haired Callidus finally finishes her dinner, and she gives thanks for it with the same satisfied breath that leaves her lips the moment she places her chopsticks down.

"Thank you for the wonderful meal, Sempai! That was really delicious!" Midori opens her eyes, before winking at you playfully. "Well, the hamburger steak, anyway!"

Heh. Well, since she did eat everything like you told her to, she can go ahead and get ready for bed. You'll clean the kitchen up yourself while she does so.

"O-oh, no, sempai! I'll help!" She shakes her head as she stands up from her seat, quickly gathering the empty plates. "Let's clean up together, that way it'll get done faster!"

You can do it on your own, really, but...if she's going to insist...

"Of course I insist, sempai!" Midori grins at you. "And, um, I guess it's like...w-we're really a couple this way..." Her voice trails off into an awkward, embarassed silence, her cheeks flushing.

...A real couple, huh?

Yeah. Maybe.

Midori was right, at the end. With the both of you at it, the kitchen is back to its previously-unmolested self, with its pots and pans and plates all back in their racks, clean and dried.

It was here that Midori finally excused herself to get ready for bed, retreating to the master bedroom's bath to get herself cleaned up. You excused yourself as well, to get ready for bed in your own way - meaning, you immediately gravitated towards your own favorite chair, sinking into it with a happy sigh. Either by design, or simply by coincidence - the moment you do so is the moment you spot an uponened bottle of Kong at the small circular table beside your chair, along with a clean, dry glass, placed upside down. There's a small post-it pasted on the bottom of the glass itself, the handwriting upon it all familiar, pretty curves.

"Two glasses only for a nightcap!" Mami's reminder seemed to wink at you cheerfully.

Fine, you shrug. Two glasses. You can live with that.

Just as you reach for the bottle, however--

"Sempai?" A soft voice in the dimly-lit darkness speaks out to you, just as you catch the whiff of fresh soap on skin, mingling with kiwi shampoo. "Are you...um...are you coming to bed? There's...the bed's big, and I don't need that much space, and..."

How do you react?

You glance back at the darkness from where you heard Midori's voice, craning your neck over your favorite chair's head rest - before turning back to the bottle of Kong within your reach.

Slowly, wordlessly, you draw your hand back, before standing up from your chair. Stepping away from the familiar comfort of your soft leather throne and your amber poison of choice.

Any other night you'd have stayed there, you tell yourself. Any other night you'd have told Midori that you were fine where you were, and drank yourself to sleep long after she'd retired to bed.

Not tonight, though. Tonight, you want to do something different. Something different - for the green-haired girl that somehow got it into her head that you were someone worth...pursuing. Someone worth saving.

Something for yourself, too, even if the guilt of a thousand broken promises had always kept you back.

It's at least about fucking time you did, anyway.

With slightly-unsteady steps, you follow Midori back to the master bedroom, catching glimpses of the green-haired girl in the dimly-lit corridors of the apartment as she takes the lead. She seems to vanish into the half-darkness every few steps or so, only to reappear the moment you press forward. Once, you tried to grab her hand, and you were sure you would've done so - but all you grabbed was empty air, the scent of kiwi shampoo filling your nostrils.

It's when you finally get to the master bedroom - stopping just shy of stepping over the threshold to it - that you feel a pair of warm hands rest on your shoulders. You should've reacted to that - a quick about-turn, or at the very least a physical recoiling - but all you felt was warmth. Comfort. Trust.

"Let me, sempai," Midori murmurs in your ear. "Just relax. Let me take care of everything."

Two clicks and a hiss of whitesnake leather, and the familiar pressure of your shoulder holster around your person vanishes. You look around, and see the familiar glint of your Golden Desert Eagle hanging from a hook beside the bedstand - within easy reach, at least, in case of an emergency.

"Not tonight, sempai. No sleeping with a gun under your pillow, either." A giggle tickles your ear, and it's here that you feel those hands tracing their way down your arm, coming to a stop near your own Soul Gem. "And something a bit more comfortable than your usual."

More warmth, this time coming in a gentle snap that left your entire body tingling - and it's here that you realize that your Magical Girl costume had been unsummoned, leaving you in your underwear. Another snap, and a simple white silk undershirt covers you from the waist up. Not as brazen as being completely naked, but...it'll do.

You open your mouth to ask, but another giggle answers you before you could give voice to your question.

Right. Okay. That's...yeah.

"...So many scars, sempai," Midori's voice is smaller now, a bit sadder. Maybe even mournful. "What have they done to you...? How much pain did...how much did they hurt you, sempai?"

You're not...really sure. You don't remember where you got most of the scars from. They probably hurt a lot when you got them, sure, but you barely even notice they're there, actually. ...Are they that ugly to look at? You can summon your costume back if it's that unsightly--

From the corner of your eye, you see Midori shake her head. "I told you, sempai. I love everything about you."

You feel your own cheeks heat up at this. Before you could react, though, you feel her hand on yours again, pulling you towards the bed, finally. You step forward, the sensation of the carpet on your bare feet tickling you the slightest bit - and it's here that you clamber onto the massive king-size matress. One knee digging into the memory foam, then the other, before you allow your own suddenly-tired frame to rest fully on top of the bed itself.

"Here, sempai." Midori's voice again tugs at your consciousness, and you slowly roll to the side to follow it. The moment you do, a pair of softer arms - softer and warmer than anything you've ever felt in your life - embrace you, pulling you and then pressing you into something that smelled of tears and soap and love all at the same time.

This is a dream, you tell yourself in the midst of this kiwi-scented bliss. This is a dream, and something is going to wake you up from it, and you're going to have to kill them with your bare hands because they did.

"...I love you, Chiaki Matsuda," Midori murmurs as she draws back, and it's here that you see the tears in her eyes. "I'm...I'm glad I finally got to say that. Without...without being too drunk, or being too afraid, or being too flustered to say it properly."

How do you respond?

Then if it goes somewhere else we know it's an imposter.

It might be even more touching than saying it because it's a connection between souls or something.

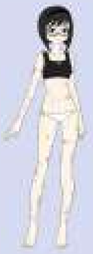
File: 1397842544313.png-(298 KB, 696x1800, Chiaki dressup.png)



Ok, now that the voting period is closed and after much debating with myself, I decided to go ahead and show what the idea for my 200 threads project is.

It's a dress-up doll.

I'll draw different costumes on top of the base and then, since the background is transparent, you can just drag the costumes on top of Chiaki using an image editing program and have her cosplay.

You can make suggestions, if you want, but I seriously doubt I'll have enough time to draw them all up.

My current list is:

Revolutionary Girl Utena
Junketsu from Kill la Kill
Fate Testarossa from Nanoha
Natsuki Kuga from Mai Hime (her biker outfit)
Oarai and Kuromorimine uniforms from Girls Und Panzer
Akiha from Tsukihime
Dio Brando from Jojo's Bizarre Adventure (Part 3 outfit)
Homucifer
Max Payne

As you can see, the list is already pretty extensive and thread 200 is only a few days away, but I figure that this is a "gift that keeps on giving" so your suggestions will be happily received, even if I can't work them out immediately.

Anyways, sorry for babbling so much! Thanks!

Torment characters.
The Nameless One is a scarred male who has forgotten everything.

Dak'kon is a male swordfighter
Fall-From-Grace is a succubus.
Nordom is basically a robot (sortof).

I think people want those because this quest has several references to Planescape:torment game.

Homucifer is called "Transcendent One" by the three stooges. Dildoes referred to Chiaki as "Nameless One".

Also, in that game, The Nameless One constantly goes "updated my journal" (outloud), which Deculture has had Chiaki do repeatedly ever since she got the journal.

Deculture also admitted to being inspired by the game and playing it in a Q&A a while back.

You choose not to reply to her. You're absolute shit at saying the right words at the right time - and you'd like for this particular moment to stay the way it is; pristine, untouched, and untarnished. Perfect just the way it is.

What you do instead is to pull her close and kiss her. Unlike the hesitant, almost chaste contact back at Mami's cottage, during your first date - you give this one everything you've been holding back.

Every single night spent alone wondering whether you'll even wake up the next day.

Every frozen heartbeat spent dancing on the edge of life and death, killing people a split-second before they could kill you, and wondering if you'll even have a moment to your own when you didn't have to worry if a gun was within reach.

The things you want, by Chiaki Matsuda.

A smoke.

A whiskey.

For the world to stop moving.

To sleep, to forget. To change the fucking past.

Your own life back, not this one where you're atoning for sins you didn't even commit.

But right now, more than anything, you wanted her.

And as Midori returned your kiss - murmuring your name as she moved against you, giving herself to you in the most selfless, loving way possible - you realized that sometimes, the universe could be merciful. It could stop being such a vengeful bastard every now and then.

The only thing you'd have to worry about now is when it would decide to take it all back, and with interest.

So a week. Just might be enough time.
Trying something new for this. A lot of new for this.

Reference the golden weapons left to collect, does anyone really think we'll be fighting MGs armed with just one golden weapon now that we have an arsenal of our own? With the way that they gravitate towards Chiaki, it only stands to reason that Golden-wielders would end up fighting each other before we can get to them.

Second - specialize in witch-hunting, arm of the Fourteenth
Third - specialize in dead
Fourth - can't tell you that
Fifth - ditto
Sixth - specialize in manhunting
Seventh - devoted to giving any magical girl a chance to reach her potential
Eighth - all-rounders with Eversor focus
Ninth - all-rounders

Tenth - dicks
Eleventh - can't tell you that Twelfth - not my department
Thirteenth - SCIENCE
Fourteenth - specialize in witch-hunting, only contains Eversors, act as the voice of the Blessed Lady
Fifteenth - can't tell you
Sixteenth - yep
Seventeenth - specialize in timbits
Eighteenth - yep
Nineteenth - yeeaap

You were expecting panic, for one. Maybe the odd bit of crying now and then - you've certainly woken up with some of your squad mates with their visors up or their helmets off completely, eyes and cheeks red, wads of used tissues gripped in their gloved fists.

What you didn't expect was, beside a placid, calm acceptance - a sudden heaviness in your mood, a...sort of weariness that seeped deep in your bones and settled there.

Without getting up from bed, you unlocked your smartphone and immediately searched for your symptoms, but all it came up to was either cancer or clinical depression. Last month's physical checkup came up nothing except the usual, gradual biological degradation that all Culexus go through, so that eliminates the former. The latter...well, you're not too sure about that. Maybe.

>>31752994

Your name is Chitose Yuma, a Culexus of the Ninth. Your suit name is Omegon, and you're the only one in your rank that can introduce herself as such to non-Culexus. When you found out that your parents both killed themselves shortly after your contracting, you merely accepted the news with a straight face before breaking down into laughter. Kyoko had to stop your melee drills and take you to one corner to sort yourself out before resuming.

And here you are, sitting up on your bed, clutching your smartphone in your hand before finally silencing the beeping alarm with a lazy tap of your thumb.

That was the four-hour alarm for Walpurgisnacht, by the way. Four hours until the most powerful Witch there ever was breaks through the veil behind reality and starts breaking shit.

That feeling of cold, uncertain dread knowing that it's going to hurt like a fucking bitch, even with the anesthesia - but with the consolation that it's a good thing, and that you'll feel much better about everything afterwards.

...Okay, wow. Now you're just grasping at straws here.

Maybe there is something to this clinical depression thing.

You should probably drop by Haruka's silent room later. To ask about it and stuff.

Just before you say goodbye for the last time.

Seriously, though - it's not like it came out of the fucking blue. Walpurgisnacht was predicted months before they started announcing the weekly alarms, then the daily alarms, and then the hourly alarms. Prognosticators and Culexus from every Officio who gave a rat's ass about the end of the world began to connect with each other again, either through long-distance pulsings or, more conventionally, VoIP - comparing notes, comparing predictions, and basically just shouting each other down on just when this huge motherfucker is going to break through the warp and kill everything.

It wasn't until Miss Malal, the first Culexus of the Ninth, and undeniably the most powerful - she can make a girl throw up her lunch, breakfast, and DINNER the night before from an entire mile away - stepped forwards and declared, in a loud voice, when and where it will happen. Right down to the second.

Everyone shut up after that, for approximately ten seconds. You were there, you kept the time. And then they started arguing again.

After half a day's worth of arguing, cajoling, and downright threatening, they finally settled on a time. 11 AM, exactly five months away from that meeting. They narrowed it down to five locations, with nearly all the Officios attending volunteering most of their active staff to the effort.

Each of the locations would have an assembled contingent of at least 500 Magical Girls, ready to kill whatever manifests there as quickly and judiciously as possible - and the rest immediately rushing to provide reinforcements. It would be a five-prong pincer attack - and in their words, it was a plan that couldn't fail.

No one mentioned the First abstaining from this meeting, however. That was the giant pink elepant in the fucking room. Not even one of their seers, which rumor had it that even their legendary Warmaster was a part of.

..Well. It's not like even just one of them could tear apart Walpurgisnacht just by sneezing at them, right? The other, lowlier Officios can do it themselves, yes. It just takes a lot more time and a lot more bodies and a lot more daughters and sisters and friends dying, that's all.

Anyway, it's...7 AM. Walpurgisnacht, as your phone gleefully reminded you, isn't until four hours later. The entire Officio had already begun preparations two days before - and you know that everyone's been getting ready to get deployed to each of the five predicted locations. Sayaka and Kyoko's departure will be around in an hour or so.

Yours...well, that'll be much till later. Probably why Malal didn't flinch when everyone in your rank asked to be able to sleep in.

It's here, as you reach for your suit, that a banging noise comes from your quarter's metal door. It's no mystery who that could be - you're in the Culexus floor, which no other Magical Girl can stand to be in (unless they're Kyoko). And you're pretty sure the red-haired Eversor doesn't have fists bigger than your entire face.

"Yuma!" The cheerful voice of Cavefish booms from behind three inches of beaten solid steel, enhanced by a vox speaker. "Breakfast's up! We're getting extra mashed potatoes for today, too!"

...Of course. If there's anything that can stave off the depression of impending demise for Cavefish, it's the promise of extra helpings. Almost like Kyoko in a way, except, you know, seven feet tall and has muscles on top of her muscles.

How do you respond?

[]Some other time, Cavefish. I'm brooding here.

You glance at your smartphone once more, before finally locking the screen and tossing it onto your bed. Another series of deafening knocks - you're pretty sure Cavefish is just punching the fuck out of your door now - and it's here that you yell for her to give you a fucking minute to get ready. It's not the end of the wo--

...

Well, it is, but she doesn't have to be so fucking antsy about it. You got four hours left.

"Alright! Don't take too long, I'll go around and see if the others need a wake-up call, too!"

You shake your head as you hear her heavy - but quick - footsteps thunder down the corridor. Fucking Cavefish, still as energetic as a hopeless newbie even though she's been wearing the suit twice as long as you've been. Which is in this kind of rank, a pretty fucking long time, considering she hasn't crumbled into dust in her own suit just yet.

You stand up and greet your limited edition Miracle Midori x Murder Mayumi Volume 1 Cover Poster - personally autographed by Green Green herself, laminated and framed - before shucking off your sleeping gown and lumbering into the shower.

A quick, contemplative wash - whereupon the 'cat ears' in your hair still refused to settle, even after three soakings (an effect of your first ever Magical Girl transformation) - a quick drying-off, and it's here that you begin to sheathe yourself into your Anima Speculum, or more commonly known as a Culexus Hardsuit. Enveloping yourself in its tight, confining comfort once more.

...Probably for the last time in your life.

With the pressure seals in your gloves, suit and boots activated, you hold out a hand towards your helmet, the plain white protective skull-case sitting on top of your closet - and it quickly snaps across the room and onto your gloved palm. Turning it over to glance at your reflection on the smooth, egg-like surface of it, you let out a sigh.

You want Paranoia? I will give you Paranoia.

Chiaki is ~~Homucifer. This is the reason Homucifer why we didnt have Homucifer appear other than in the flashback. Because we are her.~~

~~Also, there are only three people in this Universe we know of who have the power to make people forget this hard: Malal which we already confirmed didnt do it, that one Pleidas Saint who can rewrite memories, but the saints dont seem familiar with Murderface and finally Homucifer.~~
~~Remember how the three Stooges told us that to save Madoka we need to end Homucifer? Because they didnt know that Homucifer and Chiaki Matsuda are the same person. Homucifer made herself forget and then sealed her memories somewhere deep inside her, where we cant reach her. This is also why one of the mirrors is empty.~~

~~Its probably part of Homucifers grand scheme. We are literally the Magical Girl Satan and forgot about it, guys.~~

Four hours until you buy the farm and you haven't even earned the right to paint a skull on your helmet.

For fuck's sake, it's not even really that hard to do so, when you get right down to it - you just needed to send your psychic presence physically across time and space, long enough to see how a friend of yours dies in the future. It doesn't really matter which friend it is, just that you manage to get that vision and be able to hold onto it long enough to show another Culexus, who will vouch for you.

It's just that for all those times, all you saw was Malal, dying a death she clearly didn't deserve.

Because it's not real. It's not even going to happen.

And you're not going to jinx her or get her off her game just because you want a fucking skull on your helmet.

...Well, enough time spent navel-gazing, you have four hours left to enjoy. You cram your helmet down on top of your head, wincing as the tight fit pulls slightly at your hair - and with a hiss of activating air scrubbers and pressure seals, it affixes itself tight to the rest of the suit. Your retinal display blinks to life, showing your heart rate, blood pressure, and the most recent chirps made to your account. You blink all of these away, before turning to the door, and making to open it for Cavefish.

You stop, though, as you see the reindeer mascot onesie that Kyoko bought for you some weeks ago. During that...Maximum Christmas Secret Santa thing.

[]Ignore it, and greet Cavefish normally.
[]Wear it for the rest of the day. See if you can get a laugh or two out of Cavefish, or even Malal.

NO FUN ALLOWED!

>For fuck's sake, it's not even really that hard to do so, when you get right down to it - you just needed to send your psychic presence physically across time and space, long enough to see how a friend of yours dies in the future. It doesn't really matter which friend it is, just that you manage to get that vision and be able to hold onto it long enough to show another Culexus, who will vouch for you.

What? Culexus get some sort of future projection ability?

Interesting

I think we knew that already. Its what QB uses to predict witches and the like. The other officios use other future seeing methods like seers and whatever.

If I recall correctly, Malal for example foresaw the witch in whose barrier Chiaki appeared and sent people there (saving Chiakis life in the process).

Presumably its not totally foolproof though.

No, Faust/Pinky is the looping, universal Madoka, a split personality of Ultimate Madoka. Malal is this timeline's Madoka.

We are apparently not this timeline's Homura, who has been said to exist somewhere. That would imply we're Demon Homura through process of elimination, who we haven't seen show up outside of weird dream-space since Chiaki appeared.

The stuff we heard from the Deagle's spirits implies otherwise, that the "Transcendent One" is a separate entity that we have to destroy, and that there are actually multiple Homura's from other timelines. They still might be mistaken.

>> ☐ Anonymous 04/27/14(Sun)10:18:46 No.31754146

Nothing says its impossible, but I would guess for story purposes there is only one Homucifer and only one Pinky.

Those two are (as the Homusquad called Homucifer) transcendent entities and having multiple ones running around would probably be both confusing and even disappointing (would take a lot away of the uniqueness of Pinky for example).

You ignore the reindeer mascot onesie. It was funny back then, and you'll cherish that memory for as long as you live, but it isn't really the time for that. You wouldn't want to make fun of the situation by wearing it, either - although you have the sneaking suspicion that Kyoko would actually approve of it.

Cavefish announces her presence with another series of buffeting knocks - and you open the door not one moment sooner. Had you been any slower, she would've probably broken right through the fucking thing, and you'd have to pay for it to be replaced.

...Not that it's going to matter four hours from now, of course, but it's the principle of the thing.

In any case, it's here that you look up - and up - and up some more, until you're practically craning your head skyward. Yes, Cavefish is that fucking tall - she's fucking filling up your doorway with how ungodly tall she is. Seven feet of pure iron muscle, grit, and a smile that never fades no matter how shitty it gets, or how much life actually shat on her. Malal had told you that she had to build Cavefish's hardsuit from scratch herself, she was that huge.

Make no mistake, though. For someone her size, Cavefish had always been - well, a melee monster to rival Sayaka in strength, Kyoko in speed, and Miss Malal in sheer fucking brutality. If she hadn't been contracted as a Culexus, then she'd have certainly made for excellent Eversor stock - even Kharn herself was impressed by her, if a bit intimidated by her build.

Sadly, Cavefish wasn't much of a Culexus, with barely enough of the aptitude in her to make a Magical Girl throw up. At best, she could give one a really bad case of acid reflux, if she focused hard enough. But Malal took her on anyway, first for the added muscle, and then for her ability to keep a squad together even during times of panic. She became the rock that everyone stabilized themselves by.

"GOOD MORNING, YUMA-CHAAAAAN!" The tanned, platinum blonde-haired giant booms down at you, the gleeful grin on her unhelmed face threatening to make you return the expression. Her helmet - a heavily-customized number, with its own skull paintjob AND the jawbone of a shark she killed with her own hands - is tucked underneath one suit-encased arm, the bulging musculature underneath stretching the leather and threatening to rip it apart.

"Come on, quick! Let's get to the mess hall before the others wake up! There's--"

Extra mashed potatoes. You know, you heard her. You shake your head, forcing yourself to smile up at the taller, beefier Culexus. You return her greeting a moment later, after having just remembered to.

"Aw, don't tell me you've got a case of the Mondays too," Cavefish frowns. "Cheer up! It's just the start of the week, and we're going to beat all the sleepyheads on this floor to extra grub if we hop to it! And they're healthy carbs, too, for energy!"

...Sometimes you wonder if Cavefish exists on some other plane of existence other than yours. No one should be this upbeat, four hours into the end of the world.

How do you respond?

[]Alright, alright. Let's go get that grub. Just calm down, yeah?

Yes and no.

Madokas ascention is the result of her wish and homus wish interacting.

Everyone else is always an exponential power gap behind homu and madoka... though Sayaka is closest because - fairly uniquely - she can tap her witch form for power.

Shes probablu the closest to another ascended form.

Well a bit unrelated to this message specifically, but I went back to the archive and looked at the seeing thread. Its a bit confusing.

First (when the seeing starts), Homura sees a brief silhouette of someone with blue eyes who hates and loathes Chiaki.
There was a picture included.

http://suptg.thisisnotatrueending.com/archive/28101580/images/1383579325333.jpg

Then after the seeing, we see it again, except this time the blue eyed person has what looks like Homucifer with violet eyes floating above her.

Another picture was provided.

>What would be the point?

She went into hiding after it became apparent that she no longer is able to suppres Madokami or because Pinky emerged.
Maybe she doesnt have the power to duke it out with Pinky heads on.

Pinkys own forgetfullness may or may not be related to Homucifers power. She herself said that she is not sure whether we are Homura or not. This on the other hand begs the question: If this world has another Homura does Pinky torment her too?
Pinky also seems to be aware that Homucifer exits yet didnt imply whether she dealt with her before or not.

Also, the last appearence of Homucifer was long before Murderface/Chiaki showed up. This is also the reason why Malal didnt tell anyone outright who Murderface is. She KNEW that Murderface/Girl A is in fact the Homucifer that appeared before her in the past. Malal feeds Chiaki with tidbits of Information through the Diary so she doesnt find out about herself.

Game over, man, gamver over.

Not quite. Homu was entrusted to be Madokas mortal avatar at the end of PMMM... hence the wings and bow.

Then, she stole some of madokas power in Rebellion. So, Homu is up there in the power stakes.

I dont agree with that. From what Homura says after she changed abd before the changed it seemed to me as if she transcendent witchdom. This is also implied by the new soulgem/grief seed she recieved.

Think about it, a witch is a being that is made of a girls despair. Incubators assumed that a Witch is the final form of a Magical Girl. Homura accepted her despair instead of cursing the world as a witch. She accapted that despair and lonlyness are facettes of the feeling called love just like hope.

She achieved the true final form of a magical girl. She is the third and final stage of a magical girls existence!

Rejoice, anons, we have witnessed the dawn of a new era!

You raise both gloved hands in a placating manner. Alright, alright, you tell her. The both of you'll get that grub she's so eager for. But maybe she could relax just a bit? The mess hall's just down the corridor, anyway, so there's no need to rush.

Cavefish blinks down at you in silence for a few seconds, as if your appeal for calm and sanity had only just begun to sink in - before she laughs and gives your shoulderplate a hard, comradely slap. "Hah! That's the Cat-ears we know and love! Good on ya for not fallin' into the funk that everyone's just drowning in lately!"

You steady yourself against the doorjamb, before checking to see if she's dislocated your shoulder. ...Doesn't feel like it. You shake your head, before looking back up, smiling behind your faceplate.

Well, she shouldn't blame the other Culexus, really, you start. It isn't like there's no good reason for that funk, in and of itself. If anything, at least they're just moping around instead of...well, defecting to another Officio or something, or making a break for the Seventh.

It's here that her nickname for you sinks in, as well. Cat-ears? She's never going to let you live that down, is she? Even now?

"But it's really cute!" Cavefish giggles - truly a sight to see and hear, considering that she can probably lean down and eat you if she's feeling that peckish. "Even Miss Malal was laughing in her helmet! Well, she sounded like she was gargling mouthwash or something, but there was definitely a reaction when she first saw you!"

You let out a sigh, but it's more theatrical than an outright gesture of exasperation. You've tried again and again to get rid of the 'ears' that your hair had decided to form whenever you went unhelmed. You thought it was just static, or simply something that could be washed away with expensive shampoo and conditioner - but no matter what you did, those tufts of hair kept lifting up in the shape of cat ears.

It's earned you enough giggles sent towards your direction, especially during basic - as well as the rebuke of Miss Malal herself, until she learned the truth. You learned to ignore it by just keeping your helmet on as much as you could, and simply opting to push your visor up whenever you needed to take a breather from your helmet's retinal display.

You realize now that any other day, you'd have insisted that Cavefish forget the nickname ever existed, to address you by either your former name, or your suit name - but with only four hours to go until you go to the big Deli Heal Agency in the sky, it doesn't really matter all that much, does it?

"W-well, I guess if it really annoys you, Yuma-chan, I'll stop calling you that." The seven-foot-tall Culexus smiles bashfully, knuckling her forehead with one massive, gloved fist. "I know how it feels, being called an annoying nickname, even by your friends. They think it's some kind of cute pet name, but it really just rustles your jimmies something fierce, but you can't say anything because you're friends, and--"

You hold up another hand, and shake your head. Cat-ears is fine, you tell her. It's a cute pet name, and it's silly of you to get upset by it.

...Yeah. That sounds okay.

Now, how about the both of you go on ahead and grab that grub?

"Sure! Let's go, before the other dildoes come to their senses!"

And so you do. Closing your quarters behind you - leaving behing the reindeer onesie, your Magical Girl costume, and your MM x MM memorabilia - you make your way towards the Culexus Floor Mess Hall, side-by-side with Cavefish.

Walking with the older, taller girl in times like these had always made you feel like...well, the sidekick. The best friend instead of the protagonist. It's not hard to see or understand why - Cavefish is fucking strong, fucking ripped, and very...simple, too. Not stupid simple, just uncomplicated and without guile, without deception. One of those few people without a dishonest bone in her body.

Then again - and you feel just the slightest guilty thinking this - you could probably take her if you wanted to. Malal had indirectly taught you how to blow out someone's Soul Gem, and you've been practicing on the small, one-shot liquor bottles you've been stealing from your airplane rides. They're not anywhere close to the real thing, but you can reliably sight where they'd be on a person and burst them with a pulsed thought, even during sparring, or from a distance away.

Yeah. You could take Cavefish if you wanted to. Just blast her Soul Gem into pieces while she's about to break you in half. See the light in her big, friendly eyes go out as her soul vaporizes into nothing--

Stop it. Just...stop it. There's no sense thinking about shit like this, you'll ruin your appetite for breakfast.

...Not that it'll taste like anything but ash by the time you're eating, anyway.

The Incarnation of Despair bursting through into realspace and fucking everything up in less than four hours kinda steals the gusto from any meal.

After a few more moments, you make it to the mess hall. Just like Cavefish predicted, it's empty and quiet, with the remaining members of your rank having decided to just sleep in until deployment. The only activity you can see are from the overhead TV monitors set to display the international news channels, as well as the automated conveyor belt that wound around the room carrying small plates full of covered, untouched food.

"Come on!" Cavefish all but squeaks in excitement, dragging you to the nearest table and pulling out a chair for you before taking a seat herself. Her helmet is dumped on the table with a solid, metallic thunk, its skull paintjob permanently fixed into a toothy grimace due to the jaw wired to its base. More clicks follow shortly after that - the noises of Cavefish taking plate after plate from the conveyor belt, soon filling the table between you of individually-plated breakfast portions.

Is she seriously going to eat all of these...?

"Of course not!" Cavefish looks hurt. "Some of them are for you, Cat-ears!"

Ah. Right. That's...yeah. You'll try to eat.

The moment you do so is the moment the news catches your eye. It's a report in English, describing how five category-five supertyphoons have been discovered to have developed over five different countries, all at the same time, and how the governments of each country are scrambling to evacuate the affected areas.

So it's...it's supertyphoons, now? That's the best the mutant cats came up with?

"Well, it IS effective," Cavefish replies, and you blink to see her talking with her mouth full of mashed potatoes. "People want to get out of that kind of thing really quickly. And - mph - it's better'n telling them that a really big and ugly Witch is coming, right?"

How do you react?

[]Address the elephant in the room. "Why are you so calm? You do realize what today is, right?"

You shrug here, before flipping your helmet's visor up and starting on your breakfast - a plated portion of scrambled eggs. Everyone knows you've got a dim view of the whole 'lying to the world about the existence of Magical Girls' thing - but with it not just being a cover but actually part of the modus operandi of the First Officio, there's not much you can actually do about it but play along. But wouldn't it be...easier, if people knew about you and accept you? Sure, people get out of the way of supertyphoons well enough, and that's convenient in getting the potential body count low, but is the convenience worth it?

Cavefish blinks as she crunches down on a mouthful of bacon, and she swallows before replying. "Er...yeah? I mean, it's common sense, right? If we have to explain to the entire world in general what a Witch is, then they'll want to find out where they come from." She taps on her reinforced breastplate, basically just a slab of ceramite welded onto the leather. "Pretty and sparkling Magical Girls! And where do these Magical Girls come from?" She gestures towards you with both hands, mouth in a wide, open smile, gloved gingers wiggling.

...Incubators?

"Aliens! Freakin' aliens, Cat-ears!" The tall, musclebound blonde shakes her head, before reaching over and snatching more plated portions from the conveyor belt. "Everyone'll start panicking, for one, scaring each other out of their minds, screaming that aliens are takin' over. Then those who're calm enough to think about it are gonna be tinfoiled the fuck out, thinking that their governments are being controlled by aliens all along, and these aliens control young, pretty girls and turning them into killin' machines."

Cavefish pauses here to polish off three plated portions of mini-sausages. "And the rest who's left - the rest that's stopped to really, really think about what they just found out? They'll be rounding up the rest and goin' on a crusade to 'free the world from the alien menace', puttin' guns in people's hands and shooting everyone up that's got a sparkly stone in their hand. Doesnt't have to be a Soul Gem, just something shiny and sparkly enough."

She drains her glass of iced tea. "After that, are they still going to be evacuating on time, Cat-ears?"

...But all of that's just plain assumption! She doesn't really know if people'll really act like that--

"People do stupid stuff when they're scared of something," Cavefish nods here. "I know how stupid they can get, too. I don't need to see as far into the future as Miss Malal to know that."

Hnh. Maybe...maybe so, but...there has to be a way, you insist. Magical Girls can't just pretend to be cosplayers all their lives--

"It's been working so far, honestly." Your fellow Culexus shrugs her massive shoulders again. "And the Incubators're happy. I don't see the point in trying to fix things when they're not broken."

You frown here, and open your mouth to offer your rebuttal - when a slight beeping inside your helmet cuts you off. You blink here, before holding up a finger at Cavefish, and then flipping your visor closed.

Your retinal display comes alive once more, and you blink again to see that it's muted your vox-speaker to the outside word. Private vox only, your display read. No one will be able to hear what you're talking about, or who you're talking to.

And the one who's initiated the private vox contact is none other than Malal herself.

"Omegon?" The Culexus Rank Leader's vox-corrupted voice is a bit cleaner through the actual vox, but still harsh and emotionless. "Oh, you're up. Good, I'll need you to run a few errands for me."

Oh. That's...great. Sure. Yeah. Last few hours of your life here, and you're going to spend it running errands. Perfect.

"Glamorous, isn't it?" Malal chuckles. "How's your last breakfast taste like?"

How do you respond?

What does your last breakfast taste like? You glance over at Cavefish, who seems to be savoring every single bite she's chowing down, and you can't help but feel the slightest bit jealous, here.

"It tastes like I'm going to die in less than four hours, Miss Malal," you murmur into your vox. "Now, what are those errands you wanted me to do?"

You hear Malal chuckle again, and you marvel at how it actually sounds like she's gargling mouthwash. "That's what I like about you, Omegon. You've always been direct no matter who it is. Anyway, just a few items I want you to get done for me, nothing too major." She pauses here. "Cavefish is with you, right?"

...Yeah. Yeah, she is.

"Good. Tell her that after she's finished eating her breakfast - and the breakfast of five other people - that she's to initiate Protocol 8 for the entire rank."

Protocol 8? You blink from behind your faceplate. You're not familiar with that. What's Protocol 8 mean?

Again that gargling sound. "You don't need to explain it to her, if that's what you're worried about. Just tell Cavefish what I told you. She knows what it's for."

Ah. Right. Okay, you'll get on that right after this call.

"Second is I want you to check on Girl A. She's sitting this Walpurgisnacht out, but I want to make sure she's alright in her quarters, see if she's not too bored or anything."

...Egh. You were dreading that. You don't really like to spend too much time with the Warmaster's pet unless it's absolutely necessary. Sure, Kyoko's assured you that she's alright, Malal's always said she's harmless, but...you couldn't help but feel this foreboding feeling whenever she was in your current vicinity. It's like she was a Culexus of her own to other Culexus - inciting not only irrational fear, but also hatred.

You reply to the affirmative again. If Malal had noticed your reluctance then, she doesn't show it.

Silent Room Regalia? That's...that's at the lowest level of the Officio building. It's also where the most dangerous threats to the Officio are usually kept. It's empty now, or rather, it should be...

Wait. What the hell does she have stored in there, then? Or who?

"Do you understand?" Malal repeats, and you nod here, unable to say anything. "Alright. Do you have any questions about any of those?"

How do you respond?

Except no. We don't know exactly where the incubators came from in space and time. For all we know, their civilization could exist far into the future, on the brink of the heat death of the universe. A clock ticked in the corner of Therese Witton's office, each tock mourning the passage of another dull moment. The Warmaster couldn't help but glance at it once every five minutes or so. She signed and stamped all manner of documents, humming quietly to whatever pop sensation sang through her computer's speakers. Therese paused, her brow furrowing as she tried to discern the purpose of yet another avatar of bureaucracy.

"Holly," she called out, holding the sheet up to the security camera in the corner of the ceiling, "what's this one for?"

The lens whirred as it zoomed in, and a moment later the Vanus responded through the PA, "Materials acquisition."

The Warmaster blinked, put the paper down, then looked back at the camera a moment later. "What does that mean?"

"Just sign it, Terry," Holly responded, sounding as exasperated as ever.

"No, I want to know what it's for!"

"God, fine. That one there? That's for ordering paper, office supplies, and a new photocopier for the Orange-Two offices."

"What's wrong with the old photocopier?"

Unknown to the Warmaster, Holly turned off the PA and let out a long, irritated groan. She clicked it on again a moment later to respond. "It's seven years old, it doesn't print every third sheet and the paper drawer keeps sticking."

"That's how much they cost, yes."

"Why can't we-"

"Just sign the damn paper, Terry."

Therese glared, then acquiesced, grumbling something along the lines of, "That's Warmaster to you," and "Shouldn't talk to your boss like that..."

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 18 archivalfag 04/27/14(Sun)14:06:58 No.31757261

Therese Witton had never been a creature of wit or patience. Even from her first days in the Seventeenth, some six years previous, she was recognized for exactly what she was - a wrecking ball in human form. One year after contracting, she took her place amongst the venerable ranks of the Valkyrie squad, then took Odette's place as Eversor Rank Leader two years after that, when the latter was inaugurated as Warmaster.

Of the five veterans of the Valkyries, as they were known, Therese had always been the muscle. Odette was the tactician, Lotte was born for infiltration, and Miranda made the prettiest explosions, while Harriet had a strength umatched by most Culexus. Her assignments had always been kept simple; go somewhere, kill someone, maybe bring back a souvenir.

A little part of Therese had always resented the fact, but in the end, she had always been too polite to make something of it. Somewhere, deep down it had felt as though she had been cheated. Throughout her life, she had always been perfectly average. Her looks, her grades, no hobby or sport had ever interested her. She had thought that would all change once she became a magical girl.

'If I'm going to be a magical girl,' she had said, 'if I'm going to do this for the rest of my life... then, I wish to be good at it! Really good!'

She had never wished to be the best. Therese had never been that greedy, and she had had enough sense to imagine the trouble such a talent would bring. Her only wish had been to have a talent she could be proud of, something to set her apart from her peers. And yet, there she had been. That tiny, silver-haired girl that seemed to one-up her every step of the way.

And then, finally, at long last, she was gone. Therese was free and safe in the knowledge that she was, without question, the best of the Seventeenth.

Odette wiped a crimson, formerly-white, gloved hand across her face, pushing her hair away from her one remaining eye, smearing her face with blood in the process. She bared her teeth in an expression caught somewhere between a manic grin and a vicious snarl. All eyes were on her. The make-shift arena that had once been the cafeteria was spattered with blood stains, along with larger, meatier pieces of a magical girl. An arm here, a leg there, a torso impaled against the ground. The Warmaster was breathing heavily, adrenaline still wildly pumping through her system.

"And don't any of you forget," she roared, yanking the crossbow bolt out of her eye socket, "that this is MY Officio! You want to challenge ME?! You'll end up just like poor little Argente he-"

The far doors clattered open as a corpulent white form rolled in atop his roomba. To his right, Therese Witton kept pace, easily recognizable by her bear-skin hood and cloak, a chain coiling down her arm and ending at the haft of a mighty warhammer. To the incubator's left, a smaller girl with long, dark hair, wearing a sheep-skin aviator cap, complete with goggles, and a high-collared coat that obscured all but her burning eyes. She was Chloé Bouchard, the current Vindicare Rank Leader and one of the few people who could claim to hate the Warmaster more than Argente.

"I'm afraid, Odette," the incubator started, "that you are incorrect. This is not 'your' Officio, as you seem to believe. It is mine, just as it has always been. Now, would you kindly take a walk with me?"

"She picked a fight ME, damn it! I'm still Warmas-"

"Incorrect once again, Eversor," Fubey interrupted in a rare show of assertion. "You WERE Warmaster, and I could not care less who started it. Now if you wouldn't mind, I would much prefer to continue this discourse in my office."

Despite his unwavering calm tone, not a single person in the crowded cafeteria was blind to the fire in the incubator's eyes. For nearly everyone present, it was the first time they had ever seen such a thing.

"Odette, please," Therese muttered, a pleading look on her face. "Don't make this any harder than it has to be."

"I'm not goin' anywhere," Odette growled. "I EARNED this position."

"Just as you 'ave earned dis demotion, calisse," the Vindicare interjected, her words filled with venom.

The now former Warmaster spat a wad of saliva mixed with Tyler's blood at the French-Canadian, expertly hitting her enormous boots. Chloé's face contorted into a savage snarl as she stepped forward, a pair of M10 machine pistols materializing in her hands.

"Come at me, you little shit!" Odette roared back. "You wanna end up like Argente?!"

The crack of thunder resounded through the cafeteria. Every eye suddenly shifted to Therese. Her hammer rested in a smoking crater on the floor, sparks of electric dancing up and down its chain.

"Odette, you make one wrong move and the only person ending up like Tyler will be you," the Rank Leader warned. "You've always been the smart one. You know you can't take us both."

"Unbelievable," the former Warmaster muttered. "Un-FUCKING-believable. After all I've done for you, this is the thanks I-"

With a flick of the wrist, a second thunderclap deafened the crowd as Therese's hammer soared an inch past Odette's head, decorating the far wall with a second crater.

Odette scanned the crowd with her one remaining eye. After a silent moment, she bent down to pick up her greatcoat. She dusted it off, slowly and thoroughly, then tossed it at Therese.

"Let's get this over with."

Nearly one hundred magical girls filled the Seventeenth's auditorium. In the front row, the entirety of the Valkyries waited patiently and chattered amongst themselves. Behind them, each and every seat in the room was taken up by as many Eversors as could be assembled with such short notice.

Therese stood at a podium at the left end of the stage, quietly sorting through her notes. From her vantage point, she could pick out more than a few familiar faces in the crowd. Megan Laurie and Mona Bernard had found seats in the far back rows, while Odette leaned against a wall near the entrance. The silver-haired Eversor gave her successor a polite nod when she noticed the Warmaster's eye upon her. Therese returned it with a somewhat forced smile before clearing her throat to call for silence.

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 18 archivalfag 04/27/14(Sun)14:12:18 No.31757338

"Ah, good afternoon, ladies," she started. "I apologize for the short notice, but we've had something of a busy week, as many of you have no doubt heard. I would like to offer my condolences to the entirety of the Valkyrie squad for the loss of Frieda Norton. She was a fine Callidus whom I had had the pleasure of working with on many an occasion. For those of you who were unable to attend her funeral, there is a book of condolences in the main lobby, if you wish to sign it."

"Moving on, I would like to ask Wing Captain Fredrica Volk to join me on stage."

A round of applause - and no shortage of wolf whistles - echoed through the auditorium as the Wing Captain made her way forward from backstage, stepping into the spotlight. The boyish Eversor gave a humble smile as she waved sheepishly at the crowd.

"Fredrica Volk," Therese said, "in one and a half years of service, you have distinguished yourself time and again amongst your peers. Within our most esteemed squad, the Valkyries, you have proven yourself to be the very best of our best. For this reason, it is my privilege, as Warmaster of the Seventeenth, to grant you the title of Eversor Rank Leader."

A second round of applause and cheering erupted from the crowd, far louder than the first. The newly titled Rank Leader bowed as several flowers - along with a pair of panties - landed on the stage around her. As the cheers began to die out, the Warmaster motioned for silence once more.

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 18 archivalfag 04/27/14(Sun)14:13:25 No.31757362

"Fredrica Volk," Therese started again, this time in a far more friendly, casual tone, "as you are no doubt aware, you are following in some big footsteps. Both myself and our venerable Odette Brighton were once Wing Captains of the Valkyries, as well as Rank Leaders of the Eversors. Regardless of whether or not you follow us, I trust you to uphold the values and beliefs of our Officio. You're a good kid, Freddy. Make us proud."

Neither the Warmaster, nor Fredrica would have thought it possible, but the third bout of cheering managed to put the first two to shame. Therese bowed her head and stepped to the side, relinquishing to podium to the new Rank Leader, who was already red-faced and teary-eyed.

"Oh wow," Fredrica muttered, fumbling with a folded up piece of paper. "I, um, well, this got kind of sprung on me, so I didn't really have time to come up with a big fancy speech or anything. I would, uh, first like to thank my sister, Gerty, who's always been there to support me and keep me going every step of the way."

The blonde Vindicare stood up from the front row and performed a few short curtsies before sitting down.

"Of course, this wouldn't have been possible with our Warmaster, too. I'll try not to let you down, Terry! Um, who else," the boyish magical girl glanced down at her scrunched up notes. "Oh! I can't forget Odette, who I thought I saw around here... There you are! You've always been a huge role model for me, and I'll never forget everything you've taught me..."

Three of the four Rank Leaders of the Seventeenth stood around the incubator's office, the only absentee appearing on a screen behind the incubator's desk. Lotte Laufson, Rank Leader of the Callidus, paced around the room like a caged animal, shaking her head and biting her lip to contain her anger. Therese chose to sit, holding her head in her hands. The Vindicare Rank Leader leaned against a bookshelf to one side of the room, looking almost disgusted at the others. The hooded Culexus on the screen said nothing and expressed nothing, as she had from the moment she was contacted.

"This is bullshit," the Callidus muttered, never stopping, nor looking at the incubator atop his desk.

Fubey looked at her, his steel-eyed stare somehow holding weight, despite the incubator's constant lack of facial expression. "Your opinion has been noted, Miss Laufson."

"You can't just... just DO this!"

"Interesting choice of words for a murderer," the Vindicare interjected. The Callidus' lip twitched into a snarl, but she was cut off before she could say a word.

"Regardless, Charlotte speaks the truth," the Culexus spoke up at last, her voice slow and raspy. "Odette needs help - psychiatric help - not punishment. There is no questioning the fact that she is the strongest among us. I can not help but find it rather suspect that an incubator would simply throw away such an asset."

"Which is why I have chosen to simply demote her, rather than have her terminated, Miss Blinde. I will repeat, this is not a debate."

"You're really not going to change your mind?" Lotte asked, putting the last of her remaining hope into the question. "This isn't some idiotic lesson you're teaching us?"

"I believe I have made myself perfectly clear, Miss Laufson."

"Then I'm done with this shit show, too."

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 18 archivalfag 04/27/14(Sun)14:15:42 No.31757391

"What?" Therese cried out, lifting staring her bloodshot eyes staring wide at the Callidus.

"Harry's right, Odette needs support. Maybe the rest of you don't care about her, but I still do and I won't be a part of this. You three can go to hell."

"Lotte-"

By the time Therese had pushed herself out of her seat, the door had already slammed behind the Callidus. The Eversor sat back down, her weeping renewed.

"And you, Miss Blinde?" Fubey asked, turning to the LCD behind himself.

A sharp burst of static cut through the speakers as the Culexus' suit forced another breath into her lungs. "You know full well that I can not resign, incubator. But, rest assured that I would follow Charlotte, were I able. This Officio has become a farce. As for you, Therese," Harriet's bright, yellow eye shifted every so slightly beneath her cracked helmet, "I expected better of you. Regrettably, I am unable say the same for Miss Bouchard. Good day to you all."

The screen went black as soon as the last words left her mouth. Fubey was silent for a moment, still staring at his reflection in the black monitor.

"You are both dismissed," he said with as much anguish as an incubator could be expected to muster.

Therese stood up, while the Vindicare made for the door. "Fubey," she murmurred, reaching out a shaky hand to stroke his fur.

With uncharacteristic speed, he turned his head and his eyes met hers, freezing her hand in place. "I apologize, Miss Witton," he said, "it seems I have made myself unclear. I wish to be left alone for the time being, so that I may yet again savour the feeling of losing some of my best magical girls, as well as the loyalty of many others. We will speak again tomorrow morning."

"But-"

"You. Are. Dismissed."

Just about every Eversor in the room had lined up to shake Fredrica's hand as they filed out of the auditorium. Therese leaned against a wall behind the new Rank Leader, sipping at a water bottle and smiling to herself. She had made one of the greatest changes to tradition in the Officio's history, and she hadn't heard a single complaint. Somehow, it validated her. She basked in the feeling, giggling to herself every now and again, until one of the girls broke from the line.

"Afternoon, Terry," Odette laughed, stuffing her hands in her pockets as she took a spot beside the Warmaster. "Nice work out there."

"Ah, thanks!" Therese said, blushing and giggling. "I'll admit, I had to get Holly to write the speech for me. I'm not so good at public speaking, aheh..."

"That so?" Odette said, unconsciously gripping the crumbled piece of paper in her pocket. "Well, it looks like everyone liked it."

"Yup! I gotta say, I didn't think you'd make it. Not, uh, not that I'm not glad you came."

"I was just heading back after lunch and Holly called me about it. Figured I oughta swing by. Been a long time since I got to see one of these."

The Warmaster nodded. "Chloe's, wasn't it?"

"Yeah. And the one before that was when you, Mimi, and me all got promoted at the same time."

Therese nodded, getting lost in the memory for a moment. Shaking herself out of it, she said, "Oh, um, sorry for not coming to see you yesterday. I had things. Um, Warmastery things. I mean, no, um-"

The smaller girl raised a hand to calm the stammering Warmaster. "Relax, I understand. Don't forget, I used to do all that stuff, too."

"Ah," Therese murmurred, chuckling softly, "yeah, sorry. Even when I was Rank Leader, it was nothing compared to this. I don't know how you managed it for three years."

"With great strain on my mental health, if you'll recall."

The Warmaster nodded again, smiling. "I would have thought you'd take today off. You really should be resting right now."

"Lotte said the same thing," Odette said, giving a short snort of laughter. "I figure I'll get this assignment over as fast as possible, then take a week or two off and visit all my old friends."

"Ah. So... you and Lotte are official now, huh?"

"Aheh," Odette gave a sheepish grin and scratched at the back of her head, "yeah... I guess you heard about that, huh?"

"I would think that just about everyone in the Officio has by now," Therese said. There was something in her smile that Odette couldn't quite place. It seemed hollow, yet not at the same time.

"Still don't like her, huh?"

"I," the Warmaster paused, trying to put her thoughts into words, "I don't know... It's complicated."

Odette murmurred a quiet acknowledgement. "You two used to be pretty good friends, back in the day."

"Times change, Odette," Therese replied, bringing the water bottle up to her lips. "Times change."

The shorter girl nodded. "Listen, before we get all weird and nostalgic, there's something I really have to say."

Therese cocked an eyebrow as she took a drink.

"Not exactly the kind of mood I was hoping for, but," Odette took a deep breath to steady herself, trying to remember the proper wordings, "I formally request that I be considered for the position of Equerry of the Seventeenth."

Therese blinked, then stared at her former mentor with wide eyes as, for a reason she couldn't quite place, the memories of that fateful day three months ago suddenly came flooding back.

On a wall facing the ocean, I have a great view of the ground. Judging by past experience, I could just barely break my legs from this height if I fell. Maybe if I hit those rocks over there just right...

"Less likely to bump into people who can relay where we went to Cap'n. You comfy back there, hon?"

It's not comfortable back here. I'm balled up in a net made of spiderwebs whose origin I am trying very hard not to think about. My left arm's starting to fall asleep.

"Yeah," I lie.

"Ihihihi, good, good~."

The spray of the ocean is at my back, and I can't stop looking down. My clothes are still wet and this proximity to the sea isn't helping things at all.

"Couldn't I hide in your room?"

This thing that's holding me keeps rocking back and forth in the wind and it's making my stomach churn.

"My my my, you're being awfully forward, Elly~. I don't think you'd like it in there, though."

Fuck you and your innuendos. You're making me sick, you freak.

"Getting dizzy..."

Actually, I really am getting pretty nause-

"Upsy-daisy!"

As soon as I'm hauled onto solid ground, I fall to my hands and knees while my stomach tries to expel its contents through my mouth. Nothing comes out, though. Then I fall on my face because my knees won't support me anymore and I'm dry heaving like a fish trying to breathe. Suzi is clicking her tongue at me like it's my fault.

"Mmm, hang on, lemme get that for ya'," is all she says before she's got her hands on me again. I wanna tell her to get the fuck off but the queasiness from earlier hasn't worn off, and my stomach hurts like hell. There's some clicking noises as my body feels lighter and lighter. I think... Yeah, I can pull myself up. Suzi gives me water again, but it hurts to drink on an empty stomach. I bet she was counting on that. Sadist cunt.

I didn't notice it before, but over the smell of salt, there's a flower fragrance in the air. It's different from what Suzi's wearing, whatever it is. I look around me and see blobs of red and green in rectangular patterns, arranged around a single table in the center. Roses, judging by the scent, which would make this somebody's garden.

I wouldn't have thought there'd be something like this up here. Not here, not back at the Eighth... Come to think of it, are all magical girls insane?

Suzi's marching towards it, dragging me along and saying things like, "Now you just sit at that table over there and-- Oh dear."

"Nnnh?" I still don't feel right after losing my lunch. Not that I want to answer her or anything, anyway.

"That's Milly," she whispers while pointing at something; her breath tickling my ear freaks me the fuck out. "Though you should call her Miss Schulz or she'll throw a fit~. I'd figured she'd have gone inside by now."

If I squint a little, I can see a figure sitting at the table. Mostly wearing white, and brown hair. She's looking right at us. And after getting up closer, I can tell that she's frowning.

"She's a sheltered girl, so just... Be quiet and she won't be a bother."

Oh. Well that's easy. And that assumes this isn't some sort of setup to crush my spirits. I'm wise to your games, you bitch.

Suzi pretty much drops me on the chair in front of this... scary looking girl. She's glaring at me so intensely I can't bring myself to look at her. I don't want anything to do with any of this.

>> ☐ Magical Scribe Eleanor Slam vs. Magical Aristocrat "Milly" Schulz Attarou 04/27/14(Sun)14:22:38 No.31757521

"Miss Berry. Why have you deposited this ragamuffin at my table during my afternoon tea?" She demands, indicating the spread of fancy cookware - I think it's ivory? Is that even legal? - and a plate of what look like cookies.

Suzi's rocking on her feet like a little kid and grinning again. "Apologies, my cute little Miss Millyyy, bu-"

'Milly' cuts her off tersely, "Please don't call me that."

Fancy girl has thoughtful look on her face all of a sudden. She hasn't stopped drinking her tea, but she's staring at me with an... uncomfortable look of pity.

Fancy girl sets down the cup. "I'll allow her to stay," she replies, her voice no longer as stern. It still has a bit of edge to it when she adds, "but if she acts like some callous ruffian I will formally introduce her to the ground at terminal velocity."

Ah, there's the familiar threat of consequences for not doing something arbitrary. Sounds awful tempting, though.

"Thank ya' kindly, Miss Schulz. Now if you'll excuse me, I was gonna visit my old foster home." Suzi's leaning up in my face now and leering at me and I don't like iiiiiiit. "Be good now, Elly."

I just nod. Sure, sure, just go awaaaaay.

Creepy spider woman finally pulls away and waves goodbye with a cheeky grin as she leaves. By jumping off the goddamn roof with a loud "Yahoo!"

I'm not even surprised anymore. All I know is I haven't had food in a couple days and I want some of whatever this person is having because it looks like something sweet.

[3/8]

>> ☐ Magical Scribe Eleanor Slam vs. Magical Aristocrat "Milly" Schulz Attarou 04/27/14(Sun)14:23:39 No.31757535

"My apologies, would you like some?" she perks up. "You look famished."

I didn't even realize I was staring. Dimly, I nod.

"Speak up, now."

I thought I was told to be quiet. Is this some kind of test?

"Yes," I rasp.

"'Yes, please'."

I don't care what it takes, right now I want that sugar.

"Yes, please."

"'Yes, please, -Miss Schulz-.'"

Oh, fuck you. Fuck you, you prissy little bitch.

"Yes, please, Miss Schulz."

"Very good." She seems appeased for the mome-

"Sit up straight, now," she snaps at me as I try to put one of the confections in my mouth, "and don't just eat it, you must dip it first. Really, being on the brink of starvation is no reason to act like some savage." But that's exactly the time for manners to start breaking down! Can you just get to the physical torture already so I don't have to deal with this psychological crap?

Mechanically, I follow her instructions. Adjust my posture, dip the cookie-thing in the tea, then quickly eat it before she can change her mind. It's kinda buttery, and it practically melts in my mouth. I don't know squat about tea, but after taking a sip (pinkie out, just to be safe), I find it to be sweet-tasting as well. This is actually pretty tasty, much better than cup ramen and the cheap junk I usually buy.

"There, isn't that much better?" Miss Schulz asks sweetly. "You're looking more like a real lady already." Nnnng, stop it, you lying liar. You're making my face burn red.

I have to agree about things being better, though. Compared to my normal routine, this is... Nice. The air isn't stale, my outfit's dried out in the breeze, and I don't have to do anything other than sit up here for a while. Not like I could go anywhere; my body still throbs dully, reminding me that it's utterly exhausted. Well, no matter. I could watch the birds, maybe. It might get boring, but for now I guess this is nice.

Yeah, this is-

"Eeeeek!!"

I nearly drop my cup when she shrieks. "Are you okay, Miss Schulz?" I ask. She's staring at a spot on her dress that looks like... Like a bird pooped on it. The ones that passed over a short while ago. I don't see any napkins, so I undo my cravat - usually I don't even remember that's what it's called - and offer it up to her. "Here, you can use this to-"

"No," Miss Schulz murmurs, her voice shaking. "No need, I'll be fine in a moment, please excuse me."

Miss Schulz stands up and faces away from me after pushing in her chair. As I try to rearrange my cravat - how did this thing work again? - she pulls reaches into her neckline and pulls out her soul gem. It's a very pearly white, but I can't make out the finer details before strands of silk erupt from the ground and wrap around her. From her toes up past her head, she is cocooned in the stuff, all in the span of a couple seconds.

So this is her magical girl transformation? The costume change -would- get rid of the stain, but isn't this excessive?

Something spiny punches through the shell from the inside out, some kind of a gold-colored spine. Then another on the opposite side. And then the whole thing is shredded in half as Miss Schulz tears it apart with a yell. A large pair of blue butterfly wings spread out from her back, and the spines turn out to belong to a set of maces with gold gilding around them. She kind of does look like a butterfly. It's rather pret-

"You shit-flinging turd wings!"

...Huh? Did Miss Schulz really just-

Is that really her voice? It sounds much more... Accented. And gruff. And... angry.

Miss Schulz, or the person that was Miss Schulz, dashes to the edge of the rooftop and screams, "Better run you sniveling little twats!" before jumping into the air. The wings on her back flap just those of a butterfly, and the whole thing would look very graceful, but-

Butterflies don't cuss like that.

"Get back here you sniggering fuckwads!"

"Burn in Hell, you smegma-sucking wankers!"

Butterflies don't vaporize birds with jagged bolts of lightning.

"Eat this!"

Butterflies don't club birds with spiked maces in a spectacular explosion of gore.

One of them manages to actually flap its way down to a spot a few feet to my right. I can't really bring myself to look at it, but I think it was missing part of one of its wings. And streaking out of the sky is the berserker, aiming a kick at the defenseless creature. I shut my eyes tightly before it happens.

There's a loud crunching sound, and something splatters against my sleeve. I don't want to look, though. I don't want to see any of it.

"What, does it hurt?"

No, no, focus on something nice. Focus on, uh... Focus on the teapot. Open your eyes and look at it and help yourself to some more tea before you're mashed into paste. I will myself not to indulge my curiosity in what the sadistic woman is doing to the remains of the unfortunate bird. Instead, I try to calm the fuck down and have some fucking tea and salvage my fucking day because I was actually enjoying myself for once.

There's a skull face on the teapot.

If this is a flashback how come Yuma has a MMxMM poster? Shouldn't Midori not know that Chiaki exists and therefore has no one to base Murder Mayumi on? Also I thought it wasn't popular at this time.

There's a skull face on the teapot.

There's a skull face on the teapot.

There's a fucking skull face on the teapot. And on the cups. And the plates kinda look pretty fucking bony, too. THE FUCKING TABLE AND CHAIR LEGS ARE MADE FROM ACTUAL LEGS. HOW DID I NOT NOTICE THIS?

"That'll teach you, you vultures!" spits the madwoman before she walks back into my field of vision. The maces are gone, but she's covered in... I want to say I lost my appetite, but I can't stop eating.

"Terribly sorry you had to see that. I feel like I've lost my appetite, what about you?"

Ha... They're all batshit crazy. Every last one. I shouldn't have let my guard down. I shouldn't have eaten these addicting things. If this wasn't all so goddamn awful I'd be laughing.

"...Are you quite alright?"

"Fine!" I scream at psycho twat, spitting up crumbs as I talk, "Absolutely fine! No problems at- GODFUCKINGDAMMIT!"

SHE FUCKING KICKED ME IN THE FUCKING SHIN WITH THOSE FUCKING HEELS AND IT FUCKING HURTS HOLY SHIT HOLY FUCKING SHIT GODDAMMIT IT FUCKING HURTS FUCK I ALMOST CHOKED THERE YOU CUNT!

"Rude! That's no way to behave!" SHUT UP!

"Consider this a small mercy, next time I may just kill you." JUST DO IT ALREADY YOU BITCH! GOD!

But she doesn't. Instead, fancy pants butcher girl takes all her stuff, but I grab every last goddamn cookie thing from her plate and clutch onto them like an addict, literally stuffing them into my mouth. She scoffs before putting her macabre collection into her inventory. "Bloody disgusting foreigners..." she calls callously before finally, FINALLY GOING AWAY.

Fucking hurts. Eating this fucking stuff off a fucking corpse garnished with fucking murder sauce and everything fucking hurts. And I have to stay up here or Fuckface is going to make things worse. I drop the rest of the cookies and let them break into crumbs on the ground. None of this is enjoyable anymore, and I'm getting cold and it's making my fucking shin hurt worse and I can't stop myself from screaming "GODDAMMIT WHY THE FUCK IS EVERYBODY SO FUCKING INSANE I CAN'T FUCKING TAKE THIS!"

In spite of literally fucking everything hurting, I can stand. Which means I can flip this fucking table. "FUCK YOUR TABLE!" And grab the chair I was using and bash the table with it, both of which prove really fucking unfairly hard to break. "FUCK YOUR CHAIRS!"

Well fuck, the fucking roses aren't immune to getting hit with a chair, so "FUCK YOUR FLOWERS!" I scream as I crush roses with the macabre stool.

And then I lose my fucking grip on the stupid fucking chair and it flies out of my reach and I'm just so fucking tired that I can't fucking stand anymore. I fall onto the ground and weakly punctuate my words by pounding the rooftop with my fist. "FUCK THE SIXTH! FUCK THE EIGHTH! FUCK THE INCUBATORS! FUCK MAGICAL GIRLS!"

I'm taking heavy gulps of air just so I can scream my throat raw, but fuck it, I want the world to know : "FUCK ALL OF THIS!"

What did Suzi say?

That she was a 'sheltered girl'?

Sheltered girl... Was it a bomb shelter?

Haha... ha... I want to fucking cry and I can't even do that. Fuck me.

"Eh? Three options, and you had to pick the really uncool ones, like some kid who can't wait until Christmas to open her presents?" Even with the vox removing all warmth and emotion from her voice, you can't help but hear the playful, mocking tone in Malal's words. Her incredulous response delivered with the kind of edge that sounded much more natural coming from some sort of yankee hoodlum crouching in front of a convenience store than a distinguished veteran.

"Look, we both know you're going over there anyway, so why do you want to know now, huh? Are you trying to put one over me, is that, Omegon? That it?"

You find yourself swallowing here, suddenly unable to reply properly.

B-but...but she asked you if you had any questions, and--

A moment of tense silence passes between the both of you, with the grainy video feed of her skulled helmet glaring at you from the corner of your retinal display - before she chuckles once more.

"Relax, I'm just fucking with you. You should really lighten up, you know, it's bad for us to have such a huge stick up our asses." Another chuckle. "Anyway, Girl A's sitting out the party because I think it'd be in our best interests, both in the short and long term, that she does." You see your Rank Leader lean back and cross her arms over her chest. "How's that? Satisfy your curiosity any?"

...Well, it sort of does, you suppose...not in any really satisfying way, but it's something for you to go on.

"Hah, listen to this kid." Malal shakes her helmed head. "Like I said, you'll find out when you get there. As for Silent Room Regalia...well..." The Culexus leans forward, gloved hands on her knees, before nodding at you. "Kharn. Kharn's there."

Kharn? But...isn't Kharn supposed to be giving the Eversors their deployment speech right now...?

"That's why I told you to make sure no one will be following you, right?" Malal replies, just as what sounds like applause thunders around her. "Right, I need to pour our Warmaster another peppermint chocolate shake. I'm counting on you, Yuma."

Right. Okay. You'll...you'll do your best.

You feel a chill stab its way through your spine as the connection is severed - and when you lift your visor back up, Cavefish's mouth falls open. "Whoa. Everything okay, Yuma-chan? You look kinda pale, there. What'd Malal want?"

...Wait, she knew it was Malal? Shit, is your suit malfunctioning or something?!

The musclebound blonde grins. "Hah, I guessed correctly! Nah, nothing's wrong with your suit. But your shoulders really bunch up whenever you're talking to her." As if to demonstrate, Cavefish tenses her own pauldroned shoulders, the musculature bulging there. "See? You were like this the entire conversation. I think that's what they call a tell, or something."

Ah. That's...yeah, you can see why.

Dammit. You have to catch that kind of thing, really.

"Is it more errands for you, then?" Cavefish reaches for another plated portion of very unhealthy-looking bacon. "Gonna wash the Warmaster's car or something?"

How do you respond?

You drain your own iced tea before slamming the visor of your helmet down, masking your features. Yeah. Yeah, something like that. Washing the Warmaster's car. Yeah, definitely just something like that.

Christ. You know she doesn't really mean anything ill about it, but sometimes the Rank Leader can get really fucking annoying. Nothing as bad as Kirika, of course - you've heard enough from gossiping Eversors in the hallways about just how sadistic the Eversor Rank Leader could be - but she still could rankle you like no one else.

You're not sure if it's her always talking like she knows everything YOU want to know, but she's not going to tell you anything but the most tantalizing hints because she's an asshole like that - or her laser-like focus on messing with YOU and just YOU. She never pulled that intimidation shit earlier with anyone else - not even Cavefish, and she's usually everyone's patsy. You've forgotten how many times you had to force yourself not to react, to refuse to be baited - but unlike a schoolyard bully who's really only doing it because they're acting out a bad childhood, that even served to fire her up more, making her redouble her efforts.

"Well, if that's all it is, you'd better get to it, then." Cavefish grins up at you. "If you need any help, you know my helmet frequency, right?"

...Ah. Yeah, you do. But...you don't think she'll be able to help you anyway.

"Eh? Why's that?" The blonde blinks, spooning ketchup all over her pancakes and scrambled eggs. "Miss Malal had something for me too, or what?"

Yeah, she did. Something about Protocol 8? You have no idea what it means, but she told you that Cavefish would know what it meant.

As soon as the vox-speakers on your helmet spit out those words, you see the muscular blonde's own face pale very slowly, her eyes widening. Her fork - which had been en-route to stabbing its tines into ketchup-slathered eggs and pancakes - is slowly lowered and placed back on her plate. As if the usually-hearty appetite of the blonde muscular giant has suddenly been extinguished right then and there.

"Protocol 8, huh...?" Cavefish looks down at her gloved hands - and you're stunned to see that her fingers are shaking. "It's...I was expecting this, honestly, but to actually hear it..."

What? Expecting what? You sit back down, before reaching out and grabbing both of your friend's gloved hands with your own. Cavefish? What the hell is Protocol 8? What's wrong? You don't understand--

"I-I'm fine," Cavefish stands up suddenly, a smile frozen on her face. "Just...just fine, Yuma-chan! It's..it's just a really long errand, that's all. I gotta run and get it started, or else it won't get done in time!" She snatches her own brutally-jawed helmet off of the table and hastily crams it on top of her head - the gruesomely-pupilled eyes lighting up as it activates. "You go do what Miss Malal asks you to, and pronto!"

B-but...Cavefish! HEY!

No dice. Even with you shouting her name, Cavefish's tall, muscular bulk does not even so much as look back at you as she sprints down the corridor. Leaving behind the plated portions that she was just about to devour.

You glance down at her abandoned fork, before turning back to look at the direction where she'd run off to.

What the hell was Protocol 8 anyway...?

Ngh. You'll have to ask press Cavefish about this later. Probably tickle her until she HAS to tell you.

Anyway, what do you do now?

Also, anyone else think that Cavefish will start killing people in no time? People on our side I mean, Protocol 8 sounds way too suspicious.

You decide to do your errands the same order as you got them, which means checking up on Girl A's the first on your list. You polish off a plated portion of strawberry cake - it's little more than half a slice, and should do just fine to give you that extra boost for whatever bullshit Malal has planned for you - and it's with double-time that you run towards the only elevator in the floor, the one that would lead you up to the floors where the rest of the Officio go about their daily duties.

Up to the floors where Culexus - that is, besides the popular and highly-respected Equerry, Miss Malal - are not only ignored, but also avoided. Sometimes even ostracized entirely.

Well, that's sort of an exaggeration, really. Ever since Malal began enforcing rules for Eversor and Vindicare squads to take a Culexus with them during certain kinds of missions, the icy interaction between the rest of the Officio and their hardsuit-wearing comrades had begun to thaw into something...lukewarm.

It wasn't complete and utter acceptance, of course, no Culexus would ever be warmly accepted into a squad with the same intimacy and unity as they would receive an Eversor or a Vindicare - but it was something approaching camaraderie, an amiable working relationship, and that was enough for the Equerry for now.

You've experienced it firsthand yourself, just as you were experiencing it now. As you stepped out of the elevator - the car having brought you up to the floor where Girl A's quarters would be - those that spotted your helm and suit from afar did not suddenly stop in their tracks and go the other way. Those who passed by you didn't click their tongues in derision, or shared hushed whispers.

Not one of them even tried to throw you out a window.

No one talked to you, of course, but hey, it's a net gain for everyone as far as you're concerned. You can always count on Malal to strong-arm a solution where everyone came out winners.

With most of the Vindicares already having been deployed overseas, and the Eversor ranks either at the general assembly hall to listen to the Warmaster's speech, or at least making their way towards it - this particular wing of quarters was deserted.

You keep walking, looking out for a particular door - and you find it at the farthest end. Instead of a black metal plate with the occupant's name engraved upon it, the door slot instead bears a folded-up piece of paper, with the name 'Girl A' written in pen and then crossed out with the same ink.

The ridiculous nickname that the Warmaster gave her pet, 'Murderface', is then written below that, with a different hand and a different pen.

Well. Here goes nothing.

How do you approach this?

As tempting as it is to half-ass this particular errand - it'd be so easy to just bang on her door, wait for her to react audibly before making a run for it - you find yourself deciding to do the watch-wearing dildo thing and take this seriously.

It's not like you've ever shirked in your duties before, anyway - you always chose to do them professionally, even if Malal herself advised you to take the easy route. If it's anything worth doing, it's worth doing well, and that's served you right all these years. You're not going to stop now, not...three hours or so till the end of the world.

Balling a gloved hand into a fist, you rap your steel-plated knuckles smartly against the heavy wooden door leading to Girl A's room. You also crank up the volume of your vox-speaker the slightest bit, allowing you to project your voice through the thick door without having to strain your own voice from yelling.

"Girl A!" Your vox-enhanced voice echoes down the empty corridor - and any other day, you'd have felt guilty for disturbing the wing's other occupants. No chance of that now, though. "Open up! I have to check if you're okay!"

Well, alright, that wasn't exactly the most polite of greetings OR requests - but you're not exactly in a very polite mood here. Not even when you think back on your first meeting with her, with Girl A simply looking at you with dead, tired eyes, calling you a fuckface, and then throwing up all over your boots.

Oh, and she shot at you that one time, too. She missed, of course, because you were in the middle of pinning her to the floor along with the other Culexus. Trying to calm her down during one of her 'episodes'. She did wing Cavefish then, but the blonde giant had simply laughed it off.

Girl A took offense to that, and shot Cavefish's kneecaps off with a sawed-off shotgun she pulled out of fucking nowhere.

>>31779096

...Shit. Maybe you should've taken the time to be polite, at least? Fuck's sake, you don't want to have to spend the rest of your three hours left cleaning your boots, or running to the Venenum to get a bullet wound patched up. You could probably shut her Soul Gem down before she could, but Malal'd definitely know, and start asking questions--

"Y-yes? Who is it, please?"

...What? That's...was that Girl A? The girl that spoke as if she'd been gargling gravel for ten years, and swore as easily as breathing? THE GIRL THAT MADE CAVEFISH CRY?

The door opens the slightest crack, and it's here that you see a pair of fearful purple eyes behind glasses, peering from around the door.

"The Angel told me not to open the door to anyone," Girl A murmurs meekly. "U-unless...unless it was Yuma Yuckypants, she said..."

The...the Angel?

The crack widens a bit further, and it's here that you see more of the strange girl - namely, her hair. It seems to have suddenly grown out, a thick black curtain almost touching the floor. With her untransformed and only wearing the usual white nightgown, she almost looks younger than you, if it weren't for the fact that she was slightly taller. "O-oh. She...she had a spookier helmet than yours, a-and she had a really nice voice...n-not that yours isn't any nice, of course, it's just a bit too loud for me." she adds hastily. "A-anyway, the Angel told me to stay here until she came back, and to not let anyone in..."

...Miss Malal, what did you do to Girl A? What the fuck? WHAT THE FUCK?

That being said, Homura does have a strong link to Walpurgisnacht (she fought the thing who knows how many times), so its possible that the incoming presence of WN caused this.

Alright, alright, Yuma. Stay calm, you tell yourself. Things are weird, but they're not that weird. And there's probably a very rational explanation for all of this, one that your Rank Leader will readily supply when you confront her with this. Yeah.

Because Miss Malal may be many things - including a few choice ones that you won't name at the moment, because you're not trusting yourself enough to scream them out loud - but she's not someone to do something so drastic without a good reason. Malal doesn't just reach in and scoop out someone's memories from her mind like a cantaloupe and leave them a blank, smiling doll.

"H-hello?" Girl A reaches out and pokes at your visor with one hesitant finger. "Um, if you're not Yuma Yuckypants, I need to close the door and get back to reading." She smiles, a rather childlike and innocent one. "The Angel promised she'd give me something nice if I manage to clean all the guns she lent me before she comes back."

You blink here, before slamming your hand against the closing door, stopping it from completely shutting in your face. Girl A squeaks here, both in surprise and fear, and your retinal display automatically zooms in to the fact that tears are welling up in her eyes. Threatening to spill over.

"A-ah. Sorry about that." You murmur, your vox-speakers automatically ratcheting down the volume a few notches, somehow detecting your need to appear friendly at the moment. Friendly and harmless. "I'm actually who the...the Angel was talking about." You take a deep breath, before releasing it as a sigh. "I'm...I'm Yuma Yuckypants. You need to let me in."

You pull in another breath here, anticipating her resistance, to have her narrow her eyes and ask you to provide some identification - even just one iota of the guardedness and paranoia of the girl that impressed Kharn so much she gave her the most awful nickname in the world. Instead, she frowns and shakes her head.

You pull in another breath here, anticipating her resistance, to have her narrow her eyes and ask you to provide some identification - even just one iota of the guardedness and paranoia of the girl that impressed Kharn so much she gave her the most awful nickname in the world. Instead, she frowns and shakes her head.

"N-no. Not after you say the magic word." Jesus, she's actually pouting now. Not snarling, not growling, not glaring at you as if you'd asked her to eat a shit sandwich - just pouting.

Anyway, what's this about a magic word? What--

Oh.

"Please," you automatically add. "Please let me in."

You catch the flash of a bright, sincere smile from the small gap between door and doorjamb - and you immediately hear the sound of a dozen locks being undone. A clank of one last deadbolt, and the door swings inward, allowing you passage.

You step forward - and almost trip over a crate of firearms. Pistols, rifles, shotguns, stuffed haphazardly in plastek crates that you usually see in grocery stores. And it's not just one crate - there are about ten of them inside the room, making the entire place reek of gun oil and metal.

"S-sorry for the mess," Girl A apologizes as she carefully tiptoes her way among the crates, before taking a seat on her bed. A black piece of cloth spread out on top of her mattress, with what looks like a very expensive and very complicated sniper rifle disassembled to its component parts strewn on it. "I wasn't expecting someone other than the Angel to actually come, I thought she was just joking about...um...Yuma Yuckypants." She giggles, a delicate sound, before picking up what looks like a well-polished rifle barrel. "Um, you can sit here next to me if you like. We can talk while I clean this one."

Ah. Right. S-sure, then.

Ah. Right. S-sure, then.

You make your way to her bed, also careful not to disturb the crates of firearms. After a bit of careful navigation, you finally manage to get a seat beside her - and she's uncomfortably close, her bare thigh touching against your own leather-encased one. She doesn't seem to mind, though, seemingly completely preoccupied with cleaning the disassembled rifle, part by part.

"S-so, what did you want to talk about...?" Girl A ventures after a moment. "Um, the Angel told me you'd want to ask about...about your love life...?" She giggles again. "N-no, sorry, that was a joke. She didn't really say anything."

Ah. Well. Er...actually, can she wait for a moment?

She nods in response. "Mm-hmm. I'm just cleaning, so you can talk whenever you want. It's really fun, actually! And to think I was really scared of them earlier!"

...Right. You turn away and immediately blink-click Malal's helmet frequency. The connection establishes itself after a few moments, and your Rank Leader's portrait pops up in the middle of your screen.

"Isn't she cute? Not as annoying as her old self, right?" Malal cackles here, while sipping what looks like a peppermint chocolate shake through a straw. "You can cuddle her if you want, I think she likes it. Just don't touch what she's cleaning, she's really touchy about that for some reason."

...She did. She did fucking lobotomize her. Malal just fucking mindwiped someone and is now laughing about it like it's some sort of fucking joke. FUCK.

How do you react?

I figure Yuma would not react like that even if she had proper reasons to absolutely despise Girl A.

Afterall, Malal is the most powerfull Culexus there is. More powerfull than Yuma herself. If Malal would be willing to do it to Girl A, then why not to others.

How sure can Yuma be after this, that the memories of being rescued from her abusive parents by QB and the 9th are actually real. How many memories has Malal taken from Yuma without her knowledge? From Kyoko?

Yumas a practical girl.

If Malal was going to mindwipe Girl A, if that was her endgame, why now, before the end when we could use her talents, instead of before she kneecapped Cavefish?

No point in pushing the trust angle too deep... tgat way lies madness.

Yuma has doubtessly seen Malal not windwipe many even when it's been the simplest answer. Frankly, the fact she can even question Malals actions probably means shes untampered with.

You immediately set the connection to a private vox channel, before muting your speakers' external output. The moment your retinal display notifies you that your desired settings have been applied, it's here that you do something you've always dreamed of doing: cursing the everliving fuck out of your Rank Leader.

"What the FUCK, Malal?!"

Your first outburst hits her entirely by surprise, and you hear what sounds like something wet splattering all over the inside of her helmet. "Nghk! Oh, fuck's sake, Omegon, you made peppermint chocolate shake go up my fucking nose! Ow, shit, it burns!"

You couldn't care less if you made her snort peppermint chocolate shake up into her fucking brain. WHAT THE FUCK DID SHE DO?

"G-gimme...gimme a few moments, yeah?" There's a muffled snort, a crackle of static, and it's here that Malal's display image goes black. "Oh, Christ, it's all over the inside, too! This is gonna take some cleaning..."

WHAT. THE. FUCK. DID. SHE. DO.

"...I told you to give me a FEW MOMENTS, Omegon," Malal snaps. "You can still understand and follow basic orders like that, right? Ah, here're the wet naps, these should help--"

You can follow basic fucking orders, but not if they're coming from fucking MINDFUCKING MEMORYWIPERS, you scream into the vox. For fuck's sake, she hammered this into you personally during your Culexus training. Doesn't she remember that? 'Make a Magical Girl empty her guts out all you like, but you can never empty her mind'? Did she forget that by accident, OR DID SHE MAKE HERSELF FORGET?

"..." Malal is deathly silent here, all banter and noise stopped on her end. "Done?" She asks after a while of you listening to your own ragged breathing and pounding heartbeat.

Y-yeah. Yeah, you're...you're done.

"Good. Because you're going to feel really stupid in a few seconds, so you may want to enjoy it." Her voice is flat, utterly emotionless and accentless, even without the vox.

What? What's she talking about...?

"It wasn't me," The Culexus says sharply. "I didn't mindwipe her. Actually, I managed to stop the entire thing just in time, and got most of her long-term memory saved. Sucks for short term, but that's a bit harder to rescue."

You glance at the girl sitting beside you, the very picture of contentedness - humming a cheerful tune while re-assembling the rifle she'd been cleaning.

"It only looks like she got wiped because I restored her memories in a delayed-release pulseback. She'll be remember things bit by bit after twenty-four hours, that way she doesn't have some sort of breakdown."

A-ah. That's...uh...yeah.

...Yup.

"Good."

You close your eyes and resist the temptation of punching yourself in the face - and instead focus on what you want to know.

If Malal didn't do it, then what did?

"Two theories." Malal's display picture comes back on, with the Culexus raising two glove-encased fingers. "Walpurgisnacht being so close is having an effect on her. It's not all that rare of a reaction, right? Some of us go a little crazy when the Death Of All Living Things is coming to town?"

Yeah, but...but that only happens to Magical Girls that are, like, an inch or so away from Witching Out.

"I already checked her Grief Seed, too. Purified it twice myself, so we're safe there." A moment. "The second theory is that she suffered some sort of mental breakdown after what happened to Kharn."

...Wait, something happened to Kharn? You didn't hear about anything happening to the Warmaster, and that is in a feat of itself. With the controversial Russian always at the forefront of gossip and rumors, it's actually rare for someone NOT to be updated on the Warmaster's day-to-day.

"Right on the first try, Omegon." Malal nods, clapping both gloved hands. "Nicely done. For a moment I thouht you were going to actually pick Miracles, and I know you're not that stupid."

You snort in your helmet, here. What for, then? Why all this cloak-and-dagger bullshit? For what purpose?

"Really?" No chuckling from Malal, here - just plain laughing. "R-really? I have to spell it out?" She shakes her head. "Right, right. You're probably having a hard time keeping up, and I don't blame you. Fine, although this is really just common sense now." She holds up two fingers again.

"First is morale. What happened to Kharn happened around three days ago, just as the entire Officio was starting to get ready for Walpurgisnacht. Take into consideration the emotional resonance of finding out your own Warmaster is not only near death, but also near Witching Out. Very fucking near. Like...like the smallest fraction of a nano-meter close. I think if you so much as THINK sad thoughts around her now she'll Witch Out so hard you'd think you were in a Beatles video. When they were experimenting with crappy animation and rotoscoping."

...Alright, so you get that. Kind of. But what about the second item?"

Malal is silent here, before she puts her hand down and sighs. It's only after a few moments of sullen silence that she replies.

"I'm keeping a promise," She says simply. "Let's leave it at that."

That's...but that's STUPID. All of this? Just because of a fucking promise? The first reason's good, sure, but--

"You'll get it when you're older," Malal snaps again, her voice brittle. "I don't need to explain myself to you, Omegon. Just do as you're told and everything will work out according to plan. Understood?"

"Understood, Chitose Yuma?"

We were mourning the dead when Death came for us.

One-hundred of my sisters and I, each of us clad in grief and white. Weeping, wailing, in remembrance of twenty-one dead, three squads slain in service to our Warmaster. Murdered and betrayed by one of the Ninth.

We were gathered at the penthouse of our headquarters, around the gazebo where our Warmaster liked to spend her time. The Ninth, she had promised us, would be punished for their crimes. Their Warmaster would be humiliated, the murderer brought to justice, and their prized whore given as recompense. My friends and sisters-in-arms agreed at once.

And so did I, but only because no good Magical Girl of the Third ever disobeys Ahriman. I counted good friends and people I greatly admired among those who died: for me, twenty-one heads of the Ninth plus the murderer's would have been good start, and a purge of their whole Officio would be better. Blood, after all, must always be answered with blood. But I held my tongue, because I was a good girl.

So there I stood, seething in silence while those around me wailed and wept. Then came the elevator, and three girls stepped out.

One was clad in leather and iron, her face hidden by a skull-faced helmet. Her mere presence put me on edge, despite (or because of?) her armor obscuring everything about her.

One was...I wasn't quite sure what to think. She was short, thin, wearing a skirted uniform. Everything about her seemed unremarkable, save the eyes—-violet windows to a shattered soul, glued back together with focus, the focus of one who knew she had nothing else left in the world.

And then I saw -her-.

Kharn Valnikov. Warmaster of the Ninth Officio. I'd heard much about her—-and who hasn't? Everyone knows about her skill in battle, and her mad lust for blood. A murderous Warmaster for a pack of murderers, not to mention her her bottomless appetites for plucking lillies. 'Kharn' was a name the Third spoke with disgust, with distaste, and I was no exception, but when I saw her for the first time, all thoughts of anger and scorn fled.

She wore a black greatcoat with burnished skull-pauldrons. She held her head high, a small smile on her lips, her red-pinpricked ebon eyes filled with predatory amusement. She walked, and her black iron-shot legs crushed the carpet with every step. She had crowned herself with the traditional Warmaster's cap, that symbol of absolute authority second only to an Incubator's. And above all else, she was entrancing, utterly entrancing. Like a weapon made to end lives screaming and drowning in blood, yet forged with absolute artistry: at once beautiful yet terrible to behold. An angel of death.

>> ☐ Red Angel TwiceBorn 04/28/14(Mon)13:15:00 No.31781483

Vaguely, a small part of my mind noted Equerry Erebus stepping forward. It comprehended, on some level, the tense negotiations that took place, ending with a colossal chainblade being left impaled into the floor. It anticipated the inevitable talk with Warmaster Ahriman, and the battle of wills taking place between two beings of profound might. But that was only a very small part of me. The rest was distracted by the cold, eery beauty of Kharn Valnikov. I felt something tugging at the sides of my mouth, but I couldn't figure out what it was.

That was how things went. My eyes, transfixed by the Warmaster of the Ninth, even as she stared at 'Trisagion', our favorite painting of the Blessed Lady, mumbling words no one could hear: or when she finally spoke with Warmaster Ahriman, and any hope of peace died alongside three of our number.

I was still staring when she butchered ninety-five of my sisters-in-arms and then came for me.

And when she came for me, time seemed to slow. She shouldered through the bisected corpse of one of my sisters, the spray of crimson shrouding her, like the sanguine wings of a red angel. Blood dripped from her hair, the hem of her clothes, hurled off from the whirring ripper-maw of her weapon, but her black clothing drank the red that soaked it until all that was left was a bright sheen.

All save her face. Near-translucent skin, pale like the moon, bearing a madman's grin as the chainblade flew through the air, screaming for my flesh.

I couldn't do much. My weapon felt heavy, my arms like lead. I did what I could, urging my body to defend itself and cut my attacker down, but what could a mere mortal do against a red angel of death? The chainblade first cut through my weapon, then my arms, then horizontally through my waist.

The last thing I saw, lying there on the floor on my back, was the same thing I'd been seeing for the past several minutes—-the Warmaster of the Ninth, caked in gore and death and indulging in her greatest pleasure. The last thing I heard was her laughter, offering promises to a nameless thirsting god. The last thing I tasted was the acrid flavor of my own blood and bile, expelled from laboring lungs that struggled, futilely, to draw in just one more breath.

And the last thing I felt...it wasn't my own life fluids as they leaked out of my dying body. Nor was it the angel's sword as it swung like a pendulum, severing my head from my neck. No, it was that same damn tugging feeling again, right at the corners of my mouth. With my fading mind I wondered what this feeling was.

Then I realized:

I was smiling. I'd been grinning the whole time.

Blood...

...for the Blood God.

To the First Knight I give their skulls

It's been quite a while since I posted this, just wanted to do it again.

I forget, did the Iori writeup hint at all that she saw NECO's photo, or was it just bitching about Ruri?

SPYMASTER? THE Spymaster of the Twentieth...? Did- Did Malal just--why? WHY?

You're at a complete loss for words, here. Running you around in circles, deliberately keeping important information from you is ONE thing, sure. You're not that deluded to think that your Rank Leader has to explain herself to you, as much as you'd like it to be a reality. Keeping the near-death, near-Witch state of the Warmaster from the entire Officio - absolutely fucking insane, but considering the current circumstances, it counts as damage control, and that's fine as far as you're concerned.

But going to the fucking TWENTIETH? Involving not only an outsider in Ninth Officio business, but also the most untrustworthy, the most sleazy, and the most underhanded of Warmasters? It's like - it's like a Bad Decision Tornado, where every single bad decision that someone like Malal - or any other Magical Girl, at that - can make IS actually made, thus setting off a chain reaction and creating a giant devastating vortex of HORRIBLE FUTURE CONSEQUENCES that will just completely fuck everything up.

>> ☐ Deculture 04/29/14(Tue)09:15:43 No.31800337

"...Your analogy started out pretty cute and everything, but it kinda fell apart in the end. Still neat, though, I particularly like Bad Decision Tornado." Malal chuckles. "Don't be such a dildo, Omegon. Spymaster's actually not THAT much of a cunt, although you have a point - I trust her as far as I can make her projectile vomit." She sips from her shake again, a long annoying slurp.

"It's not like I told her EVERYTHING, though. I just called in a favor from way back, said I needed a body double for Kharn until this entire thing blows over. She said yes, of course. Saw it as a challenge, since apparently our Warmaster is like the most difficult mark for a Callidus. We're talking Nightmare Mode, here. Impossible." Another slurp, this time longer and much more annoying than the last. "Are you paying attention, Omegon? You know how I don't like being asked unnecessary questions, right?"

Yeah, you're paying attention. ...So she's saying that the reason she didn't just approach Karasawa was--

"Because she wouldn't be able to hack it, and this is one of those things where you really have no margin for error." Malal shrugs her spiked shoulders. "Look, I don't like it any more than you do. I just spent thirty minutes making peppermint chocolate milkshakes for our guest, and you know how I am with that kind of thing. But sometimes we have to swallow our pride and do what we have to."

...Right. Fine. You'll...you'll let that slide for now.

"How gracious of you." Your Rank Leader snorts, but you ignore her. There's something else you want to know, and it sure as hell isn't an unnecessary question.

"I know, I know. About Kharn." A sigh. "Well, I'll be honest, I don't have a satisfying answer to give you besides just recounting what I know." She holds up a hand, holding up a finger as if to ask you for a moment's silence - before she starts.

"Three days ago, around probably 3 AM or something, I get woken up by my helmet notifying me that both Kharn's and Murderface's vitals are in the red. Literally almost flatline. I rush out of my quarters alone, dead of the night, track their locator runes to just outside the Officio building, a couple of blocks away.

I find Murderface full of gunshot wounds and having like, three swords pinning her to an alleyway wall. Kharn's pretty much in the same shape, except someone stuck her Soul Gem with this black curvy knife thing that dissolved into thin air after I tried to pull it out. Oh, and they cut her head off and made it look like she was trying to give herself a blowjob, too. That was fun to stumble upon."

"Anyway, I dragged them back to base myself, had the night shift Venenum do first aid, restoration, all that crap. Told Kyuubey to keep it quiet, he agreed. Gave me permission to scrub the Venenum of any memory of that night, by the way - don't worry, they all think they just stayed up all night and played some pay-to-win game app on their smartphones waiting for a call. And here we are."

...So it was an assassination attempt.

"Probably. I found bloodstains all over the place, different types other than Murderface's or Kharn's. Lots of it, too, the alleyway was practically painted red. Whoever tried it had enough sense not to leave any bodies behind, or Soul Gems - they knew in advance that those two weren't going down without a fight. Impeccable timing, too - probably had Murderface monitored, and waited for her to sneak off for a couple of drinks, like she always does. I guess they were aiming for her specifically, and then saw Kharn and just fucking took it."

It's here that Malal drains her shake of its contents. "Makes sense, really. Why just go for one when you can get two in the same night?"

You nod here, carefully considering what you've learned. Trying desperately to catch up to the pace of Malal's explanation.

Wait. If they were going for Murderface, then...

"The black dagger?" Malal nods. "Yeah, I'm not sure about what the fuck it actually is, or why they used it on Kharn instead of Murderface. What I AM sure about is that it infected Kharn's Soul Gem somehow - we've spent like ten grief seeds on that thing and it's going dark as fast as we can purify it. It's like she's frozen in that state. But yeah, why'd they use it on Kharn if they were aiming for Murderface?"

You blink here. Well...maybe they thought Kharn was the bigger threat. You'd do the same if you had to pick between her and Murderface.

"That's what I thought, too." The Culexus taps a glove-encased finger on her helmet's side. "Doesn't explain their motive, though, although I can probably guess. Kharn's made a lot of enemies, and I'm willing to bet that one of them had enough of a grudge to take out a contract on her."

That's no mystery. Kharn's appetites - both in bed and in battle - had always been a cause of headaches not just for Malal, but also for the Officio itself. It's not all that far-fetched to consider that someone would pay to have Kharn offed, as well as her pet.

What happens now, then?

"We wait," Malal replies. "Kyuubey's got his suspects, I've got mine, and we've compared notes. We're also waiting for Kharn to recover - the Venenum did what they could, but besides being really close to Witching Out, some of her injuries just won't close. Murderface is...well, look at her. Perfectly healed except for a couple of scars. Tried to get any information from her, but THAT happened before I could."

She sighs, the vox speakers of her helmet turning the exhalation into a snarl. "We find out who did this, we add their skulls to Kharn's throne. Probably their entire Officio too, but I'll be satisfied with the culprits first."

The obvious answer was that they didn't want them dead. Just incapped and/or infected.

The real question is why kharn instead of Murderface if she was the originally intended target.

Either way, it's good we split them up. They can do more damage that way.

You are assuming this WAS an assasination attempt. They stabbed Kharns soulgem with a dagger that has infected her with something. Obviously they planned for Kharn to live, and possibly witch out inside the 9th.

As for why Murderface was left alive. If she was the original target, then obviously they intended to stab Murderfaces soulgem and have her witch out instead. Which suggests they don't want her dead, but rather turned into a witch. So they leave her alive, so they can attack her again later, and infect her with another black knife.

Leaving your target dying of poison is an assassination attempt, which was definitely the state Kharn was in. The thought of it would probably kick in after a bit as to wondering why they didn't finish Girl A though.

Kharn is not dying. She is transforming into a witch. There is a difference. The fact they had a unique knife specifically designed to turn a MG into a witch means that was their primary goal, not death but witchification.

And since Girl A was the original target, they presumably left her alive for the same reason. They don't want Girl A to die. They want her to turn into a witch. Smash the soulgem and that can no longer be done. Leave it intact and you can return later with another knife, and turn Girl A into a witch too.

Why their goal is to transform MGs into witches rather than just killing them is the question you should be asking.

Not necissarily. They COULD have taken her soul-gem with them.

Actually, I wonder what kind of witch Chiaki would create, considering her really bizarre situation, the fact that she has lived for ages, has previous incarnations living inside her head and so on and so on.

For all we know, Chiaki witching out could create a witch of truly absurd power, if it has the strength of all Homuras.

Something...something doesn't feel right with Malal's explanation. Everything fits neatly, of course, or as neatly as they could under the circumstances - but TOO neatly. Like everything was planned from the start - not only the act of premeditated attempted murder itself, but the fact that it WAS attempted and clearly failed.

It felt like a setup.

No, it WAS a setup, la detailed ruse that your Rank Leader would have come up with, plan, and then pull off completely flawlessly, with every detail considered. It'd be just like her to leave absolutely nothing to chance, with all the variables firmly in her grasp - that's what made her so devastatingly effective as a Culexus AND as the Equerry. She considered every possibility and had multiple contingencies for everyone, with all of them leading to her own desired goals.

But the question that remains here, one that makes you grit your teeth in frustration as you try to keep in pace with your Rank Leader's pace of thought - is why? WHY would she want the Warmaster and her pet murdered, or in this case very nearly so? What was her motive?

It couldn't be for the Warmaster rank. Malal had made it perfectly clear to everyone that she had absolutely no desire for the role itself, being completely content with taking care of everything behind the scenes - paperwork, logistics, the watch-wearing dildo shit that Kharn wouldn't even touch with a ten-foot pole.

She was perfectly content to let Kharn get all the fame, the awards, the infamy - and every single time you shared pulsed communications with her, you never found her psyche tainted with the venomous poison of jealousy. Only contentment - and duty.

Was it jealousy in some other way, then? Perhaps at Murderface? That was impossible too - you'd seen her look after Girl A with the air of a parent, albeit a disaffected one. She always left the touchy-feely stuff to Mami or Kyoko, but she always made sure that Girl A was eating, that she was being taken care of, and always paid attention to her needs as much as she took care of Kharn's.

So, no. As much as this seemed like Malal's deeds, carried out by other hands, she just didn't have any motive to. If she did have one - one that currently escapes you - then you may as well just throw in the towel, here. Trying to match wits with Malal - someone who can out-think anyone, as well as out-fight them if it came to that - is just impossible. It's an instant-lose condition. IMPOSSIBLE.

"You still there, Omegon?" Malal chuckles. "Or are you trying to figure out if I planned all of this somehow?"

You blink from behind your faceplate, feeling your cheeks heat up. W-wait, no, you weren't--

"Relax, I don't blame you. It is a bit too convenient, isn't it? And to be honest, I had to try and remember if I didn't get drunk in the past and set it up myself, really. Probably back then when I was still green and hated Kharn's guts."

"Kidding. But yeah, no, not guilty here. I didn't plan this." Malal shakes her head. "And you're not the only one thinking that I should've seen this coming. Well, I did, but it was more a common-sense-thing rather than a Culexus-foresight-thing. Chose to ignore it, because if I'm not picking it up with the latter, then surely the former's wrong, right?"

Another sigh. "Let that be a lesson, Omegon. Trust prophecies as the half-dreams, half-truths that they are. Never take them as gospel truth, and never trust them over intuition. Or common sense."

This is seriously the best time for her to teach you that. Seriously. Three hours till Walpurgisnacht. Perfect.

"I know. Gets under your skin, right?" Malal cackles. "Anyway, that's where we at right now. Still think I did it?"

You stare at her display image, before slowly shaking your helmet-encased head. No. Not anymore, at least.

For a wonder, Malal actually sighs in relief here, before nodding at you. '...Thanks, Yuma. I appreciate it." She pauses for a moment, before continuing. "Sorry if I'm putting you through the paces suddenly here - I know you'd like to at least spend more time with Cavefish and the rest of the guys. But there's no one else I'd trust with this, so..."

It's fine, you tell her. You understand. Although you wouldn't mind having a bit of time to visit Haruka before you die.

"I'll authorize it. Do it after your errands, and after that, meet me in the Warmaster's Office. That should be around an hour before go time, I think."

...You're still not convinced here. Not entirely. But at the same time, there's no one else you'd trust with your life.

You take a slow, deep breath here, before you turn towards Girl A. You blink to see that she'd been staring at you the entire time, hugging what looks like an AK-47 to her frame, the way a child might hug a cherished stuffed toy.

"...It's not the Angel's fault." She murmurs, just as you open your mouth to talk to her. "The Angel told me to kept quiet about it, but...it's my fault." There's a rattle of freshly-oiled machinery as she hugs the rifle tighter to her. "It's my fault that Re...Rape Monster-san got hurt."

You take a deep breath, before reaching out and placing a careful hand on Girl A's shoulder - a gesture meant to calm yourself as well as the girl currently hugging an automatic rifle to her chest. You feel her flinch slightly under your touch, but to her credit, she doesn't recoil or move away.

"It's my fault," She murmurs again, eyes tearful and contrite from behind her glasses. "A-am...am I going to get in trouble? Are you angry with me, Spooky Helmet-san?"

You blink at the rather strange nickname that she's dubbed you with, before shaking your helmed head slowly. N-no. It's...okay if it's her fault, you tell her, right after blink-disabling your vox speaker's voice-mangling feature - making it broadcast your own voice in a carefully modulated volume. No one's going to get mad, and she's not going to get in trouble.

You just want to find out what happened, that's all. Can she tell you what happened to her and Kha--Rape Monster-san? It's important that you find out.

At this, Girl A finally moves away, shaking her head. "N-no...The Angel m-made me promise I can't. It was a...p-pinky promise. Pinky promises are forever! A-and if I break it, I'll n-never find a b-boy..." Her cheeks go completely red here, and she hides behind the AK-47 she's currently cuddling. "A b-boyfriend!"

What? You blink at this, before shaking your head. That's...that's stupid. What kind of shit did Malal feed this girl, after 'rescuing' her memories? You've never heard about THAT kind of penalty for promise-breaking.

"I-it's true!" Girl A insists, her face going redder. "T-The Angel told me it is, so it has to be!"

You open your mouth to reply when you hear someone growl a curse, making Girl A shrink back even further on the bed. You blink at this, before realizing that the growl had issued from you - your teeth gritting in frustration at being jerked around by this, and by a lobotomized Girl A no less.

Jesus. You don't have the fucking time to play kid interrogator.

If you think that this is FUBAR you must not have seen homu soul-ripping/raping the power out of godoka, which people STILL think is saveable (which it probably is, AI YO etc).

A little mindrape probably would get Omegon tense and standoffish externally but wracked with guilt on the inside and with a bit of pushing she'd just break down with apologies and Murderface forgiveness ("It's already forgotten, Yuma. No, I mean literally. I can't even remember, stop beating yourself up about it")

And then soul gem whiskeying or whatever.

If it was just a story, then why would we be making choices?
If the decisions made are not our own, then why bother with them at all? It should be written as a book instead, so that the decisions made can always be what's best for the story.

That we make interesting, discrete choices to come to an individualized ending makes this a game.
I'm here for a game, because if I wanted just a story where the choices were made for me, I'd read a book.

The players made a choice, between two possible courses of action.
The character was not a horrible character until the choice was made, by the players, to make them into a horrible character, when there wasn't any previous indication that they were horrible to begin with.

Think about it for ten fucking seconds dumbass. As far as she's concerned she has a matter of hours left to live, and she's just found out that someone has tried to take out the warmaster - the officios biggest asset - shortly before the fight that could potentially end the world, and the only information about who that is, is locked somewhere in the shattered mind of a psychopathic amnesiac - she may not be acting like it right now, but the memories will be hitting her like a freight train a few hours from now anyway, assuming the world survives that long.

Ofcourse it does. Thats how the game works. We choose how the characters act, and how they act defines what kind of persons they are in story.

If we choose the boring, peacefull and good options for Chiaki, then Chiaki is a watch wearing dildo. If we choose the edgy options where Chiaki shoots NECOs brains out in an interrogation, then Chiaki is a full on murderface.

We choose what kind of people the characters are, and we just did. Thats how this works.

You make the decision, here and now. You HAVE to know.

Not just because of some misguided sense of justice or desire for truth - nothing so noble as that, and certainly nothing so deluded.

But you have to know what happened. You just have to.

Because you want to prove yourself wrong.

Because you want to quickly repair the now-cracked faith that your own niggling conscience had just taken a hammer to.

Because you don't want to go to your grave knowing that your hero, Malal of the Ninth, was a traitor and a liar.

And no cheesy, middle-school Pinky Promise Mickey Mouse bullshit is going to get in the way of that.

"I'm sorry," You murmur, your vox picking up the halfhearted apology and turning it into a guttural growl.

"Eh?" Girl A blinks in confusion. "Spooky Helmet-san? What did you say?"

...And to think you were chewing Malal out for fucking with Girl A's mind.

"I said," You repeat as you look up, closing your eyes behind your faceplate. "...I'm sorry."

Before Girl A could give voice to another query - to give you another second to doubt yourself, to doubt what you're doing - it's here that you move, thrusting one leather-clad arm out to grasp Girl A's face with your fingers. Your retinal display zooming in automatically, sensing your intent and tracking her as a target - the crosshairs centering on her face, allowing you to see her expression contort from confusion to complete and utter horror. The magazineless AK-47 clattering on the floor as she grabs your gloved wrist, trying to pull you off.

"N-no! NO! PLEASE! THIS HURTS! T-THE ANGEL PROMISED ME NO ONE WOULD DO THIS TO ME AGAIN! PLEASE!"

She tries to back away, to squirm away from your grasp - but you move with her, one booted foot sweeping her barefooted legs out from underneath her and using the grip you already have to pin her back onto the bed.

Girl A SCREAMS this time, screaming for help, screaming for you to stop, screaming for you to not make her forget again. And you almost do so - but you've gone too far, now. There's no going back.

"NO! PLEASE LET ME GO! I'M SORRY! I'M SORRY FOR EVERYTHING! IT'S ALL MY FAULT, I'M SORRY, PLEASE DON'T--"

"I have to know." You find yourself saying again, but in a bleaker, deader monotone. "I have to."

You close your eyes, tighten your grip on her trashing face, and force your way into her mind.

Keeping in mind that, if this bites you in the ass later, then at least you won't have long to live with the consequences.

Then how does that relate to your assertion that Yuma's actions are her own, when the players are the ones that made those decisions for her, ignoring prior characterization?

This isn't a horrible character getting their just deserts, this is like a player temporarily getting control of an NPC or another player's character, making them act like an asshole and completely out of character, and then the player returning back to their own character and letting the patsie take the fall for what they did when they had control.

Doing a prequel write-up for Magical Girl Noir Quest that takes place eleven years before the main story. Here's a snippet!

"I wouldn't?" Charlotte smiles a sadistic smile. Teeth that should be human take on a bestial look. They sharpen on the spot. Her golden eyes become dilated. "What makes you say that?"

"Usually too much of a busy body to hang out. You usually just stay in that office of yours and goof around, forcing poor Vintage to do all the work."

Yes, here we go.

"The pot calling the kettle black." Charlotte steps forward. Ruby matches her. Their foreheads collide.

Our coworkers stop their work to watch the sparking brawl. "Please, you two." I enter the lion's den. I put my hand up against Charlotte's stomach and Ruby's forehead. I do my best to pry them apart. "Warmaster, I just came here to get my assignment. You called me and said you needed to talk?" Please let this change of subject get them from pulling each others spines out.

"Oh, that's right, I did." she blinks a few times in realization. Yes, whichever deity is watching over us, I thank you for this boon. "Come, Ayano." she takes hold of my hand and starts leading me to her office. Ruby follows after us. Charlotte must be okay since she doesn't stop her.

Once we get to the office, the doors close.

I look around to see that it's as I remember. A bookshelf with rows of neatly organized manga, a clean trashcan and a spotless desk. “Vintage really knows what’s up.” I mumble.

“Yes, she’s the best Equerry any Warmaster could ask for.” Charlotte says so in a sing-song tone, “But down to business.” her gloved hand falls upon a stack of papers that are stapled together. “Here’s your assignment.” the paper is thrown through the air straight to me.

Have you ever thought Pinky was irredeemable? Even though she's been seen crunching soul gems? Ever thought Wendy was irredeemable? Though she's murdered girls slowly and painfully? Midori? Willing to accessorize to rape for money and out of fear for her own life?

THE FOLLOWING IS NON-CANON

It had been a long, strange three months for Midori Hanegawa. Being the assistant Callidus trainer had been more exhausting than she thought, and with her lover and Warmaster doing, well, Warmaster-y things, she'd had very few nights to spend with Chiaki. On top of all that, an old flame from Chiaki's past had appeared; a copper-haired girl named Wendy Cooldown. The two had come to blows in the beginning over Chiaki's affection, but they were shut down after a lengthy lecture on her emotions. And to top off the strangeness, Wendy was now their off-the-record house guest, which made for some fairly awkward mornings.

But as time went by, Midori and Wendy came to accept one another and even started enjoying each other's company. To Chiaki's surprise, the pursuers of her love seemed to spend more time with each other than with her, which made her happy...but a little jealous. Time would eventually tell the consequences of this 'love triangle'.

Another long day of work finally over with, Midori trudged through the door to her shared apartment. Kicking off her sneakers, she sighed as she plopped onto the couch. "When will work stop sucking so muuuuch?"
Wendy wandered into the living room, taking a seat next to her. "When you stop going to work. At least that's how it is in America." Staring up and down the green-haired Callidus, Wendy tapped Midori on her shoulder with the back of her hand. "You look like you could use some booze, so go hop in the shower. I could use something too."
"Wh-what? We're going out drinking?"
"Damn straight. Now get to it."
Midori stood, her body aching from the training. "A shower would be good; I feel all sweaty and grimy." Making her way to the bathroom, she heard Wendy call out to her, something about making it quick to avoid all the late-night drunkards. She would take her damn sweet time if she so pleased, it's not like Wendy had to train rookies every day.

After a relatively short shower, compared to others she would take, Midori and Wendy made their way Charles' bar, intent on drinking their woes away. And hoping a certain black-haired, red-glasses wearing girl wouldn't be home to see them completely smashed when they returned.

The hallway loomed over Wendy, looking a lot longer than she remembered. Midori, who was already falling out of her stool by her fifth shot of whiskey, clung to Wendy's back. The poor girl was unable to stand, let alone walk home.
"For fuck's sake, I haven't gotten this fucked up in a looooong time, Midori." One step forward. "And you have to be one of the weakest drinkers I've ever seen!" A few more. "I mean, I knew Japs couldn't hold their liquor to an American, except for a rare few, but you take the fucking whiskey-flavored cake." Almost to the door. "And by the looks of it, you ate more than your fair share, what with your fat ass and all!"

Finally making it to and through the front door, Wendy stumbled and fell under the combined weight of herself and her drunken companion. "Gah, fucking god damn! Jesus Christ, Midori! How much do you weigh!?"
Midori grumbled as Wendy tried to get her off of her. "Stop calling me faaaaat...I'm just healthy!" As Wendy finished slipping out, Midori pushed her onto her back and pounced on top. "Take it back!"
"I just carried you all the fucking way home and down a hallway that fucking magically got longer with each step, I know when a girl is fat! Now get off of me!"
"No, not until you take it back, Wendy-san!"
Wendy growled and rolled Midori off, sliding on top of her and pinning her to the ground. "I don't take back the truth." Glaring at Midori, Wendy brought her face mere millimeters away from Midori's. "Your. Ass. Is. Fat."

Midori struggled under Wendy's superior strength until she was struck by brilliance. "What about your ass!? It's not exactly tiny either!" With her hands being free, Midori reached up and grabbed two handfuls of Wendy's butt. "See? You have a fat ass too!" She began groping and squeezing with all her might, to prove her point.
Wendy gasped at this, surprised that the usually timid and reserved Midori would make such a bold move. Not that it didn't feel good...it felt nice, actually. Nice enough to make her do things she normally wouldn't do, especially with the alcohol in her system.
"Well? What do you say to th-" Midori was stopped mid-sentence by Wendy planting a kiss on her lips, feeling her tongue being groped by the others. Maybe it was the alcohol talking, or maybe this was something Midori secretly wanted. Without a second thought, she embraced Wendy harder, a feeling of lust flowing through them.

Wendy gently broke the kiss, opening her eyes to stare back into the crimson orbs of the girl she strangely wanted. "Are...are you okay with this? I, I mean, I just went by instinct..."
Her fears were alleviated by Midori placing a finger on her lips. "No questions, no regrets. Just take responsibility~."
Midori chuckled as they both stood, leading her copper-haired rival into the guest bedroom, intent on ravaging her till the morn.

The slums.
In any city, it's the place most avoid if they can, and everyone else flocks to because there's nowhere else to go. Most of the time it's just populated by the homeless, but there are also the shady ones, people with guns and cause, the murderers waiting for their moment to strike again.
And down here, in Santa Destroy, you get a lot of that.
It's a reason why I like going down here. Mostly its just to train with people with more muscle mass than brains, but once in a while you can spectate. Fights between neighbors don't happen down here too often but when they do happen it's quite a thing to see. With more on the lines for each party, they're willing to give up more to protect what they have. People will give their own blood away to keep their boxes to themselves for a coming storm. A few fingers lost doesn't care when it's protecting your food for the next week.
It's just how life is down here. But that also makes it a hotspot for witches and their familiars to gather around here. Usually Eightball has a few teams patrol near by this place every so often to see if anythings up, but he knows I come here all the time by myself at dusk, and stopped sending people here when he knew I could take care of shit hitting the fan myself.
He sees so much in me, I sometimes wonder if I'll fall under everyone else's influence.

I'm just roof-hopping tonight. I don't really want to get anything serious underway, especially with eyes on me from every corner of the Officio. Even Miss Cooldown, oh great and prestigious Callidus Rank Leader, has shown some interest.

It becomes a different style altogether when you know you're being watched closely.
You're not looked at as a personality, you're looked at as a Callidus. Pick your fights, win without letting them know what happened, erase the evidence, get out, scout, repeat. It's a by-the-book style of picking fights out here, but apply-directly-to-the-forehead repetition works wonders.

But nobody is out here. I know the forecast called for clear skies tomorrow so no one should be hiding under their roofs, so it's an anomaly when a populated section is devoid of people. Maybe there's some big-bad rolling through town, someone from the UAA?

That's when I feel it; the pulse of magic sending shivers down my spine, and my blinking soul confirms my suspicions.
Barrier.

Right at the barrier, my soul burns brightly. I could open it right now if I wanted, but I'm not risking anything. I was brash way back when, and under these circumstances I would have charged in already, mace in hand and not fearing what was ahead, even if it was two witches in close proximity.

But I think back then, I didn't necessarily care if I died, I just never did.

"This is the entrance." I could hear her approaching from behind me, and turning my head let me see her in her magical outfit for the first time in a while. I remembered the way her soul gem gleamed in her hairband, holding her long blue hair back as it swayed behinder as as she ran. Her light-blue MG outfit, almost reminiscent of a standard blue-collar suit, matches her waving hair like most other girls. Around her waist is her belt of stuff to throw: mostly knives and some tomahawks.

"Has anything been trying to get out?" She skids right next to me already with a few knives between her fingers.

"Not yet. Maybe the witch is preparing up for a bigger spread, and considering the area we're in it has a lot to feed on. We need to act soon."

"Then let's get this over with and report back to Eightball afterwards." She holds out her soul gem with her free hand and concentrates. A cold night breeze passes by as a hole into hell opens up right before us.

"Alright, go time."

Heavy metal. That was the most accurate sound I got as I landed on the floor of the barrier. Most witches have their own twisted visages of how the girl's despair influenced their turn, but one quick gaze makes this seem to... real.

"A, hospital?" Izzy asks with tone of worry in her voice. The normally pristine walls of white are covered in a rust, including the floor and ceiling. The ground creaks under our every step and the air has a heavy tone of death.

"It's too direct, too real." My hammer comes into my hands without so much as a thought. "This witch must be really strong to create this kind of image. Open eyes."

Normally Izzy is the one telling me what to do, but with my own experience catching up to hers, she allows me to call the shots if she thinks I have it dead-on. I think I've learned more in-the-fray experience from her alone than my callidus instructors have taught me, which makes up for my brash beginnings in spades.

"Stop." We freeze at her command, the steel knives in her hand glinting in the fake light. "Familiars incoming!"

The 'no proof' part isn't exactly right.
What with Murderface's amnesia episodes which are apparently well known in the Officio, her shooting at her own Culexus allies (and kneecapping Cavefish), and whatever other episodes that she's had between this event and Chiaki Matsuda that solidified her reputation in the Officio, I think there's quite a bit of proof.

We're only talking about why Yuma didn't apologize later or bring this up, not why she did this action in the first place, right? Because otherwise we'd be arguing about two completely different things.

The clanking and screeching of metal made it too obvious when they came. But it was the sheer number that surprised me; unlike most barriers where the minions were equalized in quality and quantity, the... q-tip things with oil and blood on them we're only a child's size but they stampeded through the hallway in countless number, the razors on their feet making a mess of the floor.

"Get back!" I instinctively hopped back as Izzy got knives in BOTH hands and flew them out. The knives straightened themselves into glowing lines; red-hot and directing themselves to the closest things they could hit. Knives pierced their way through a good number of them each time but as their energy was lost they got overrun by the coming horde.

"That isn't working!" Pointing the mace downward and sweeping it back and forth does make them stumble, fall and break apart but they keep coming and coming.

"Then you think of something!" Izzy tries a few tomahawks on them but mostly comes down to one target.

I think I know what I can do.

Even with being a mace it does have a few pointy ends, mostly at the tip where it would be easy to pig-stick people. But without a second though my left hand scrapes along it quickly, sharp pain following the blood flow.

The blood is power, its my life, my pain. It forms like my shield does around my mace, protecting it from damage, but its other function is what they'll get from it. It pains my hand as I grip it again by the handle and raise it all the way up, then bring it down right back to the rusted floor with all my might. The shield pops; waves of grey-blue lash out across the waves of enemies and cut them down. They slowly dissipate into the barrier, leaving nothing but the thrown weapons of Izzy on the ground.

I barely manage to catch myself as the sudden change in balance nearly throws me off having put all my strength into that swing. Izzy catches me from behind, making sure I'm balanced with a "you ok?" then going to pick up her tools of the trade.

"We need to find this witch quick." She says lending out a hand to me. "I don't know if we can take another wave like that."

I grasp her clean hand with my bloodied one, beginning to heal a bit. "Then lead on, my fair teacher."

Despite the chaotic battle only a few moments ago, the rest of the hallways are dead empty, only the heavy atmosphere of the dying hospital giving any weight on my shoulders. Izzy too still looks disturbed by the scenery around us.

"You're not liking the feel of things around here either?" I ask holding my healing hand, only going a bit faster by my magic.

"It's just... strong." Her eyes scan the room, her face stern yet faltering to her inner emotions. "Witches don't just embody the sorrow of the girl they're born from, but also whatever makes her crack. In this downtrodden area, it's a good chance she lost it from coming here."

"Wasn't there something you told me before?" My question comes out after looking through an open door to an empty, rusty room. "The eighth has only room for three types of girls; the insane, the crazy and the already dead?"

"I still hold to that." Her voice now falters too; softer than her in-the-zone tone of voice but nowhere near her normal speech. "I was taught that myself, but I failed in finding out which one I was among them."

"...I think I know which one I am now."

We come to a stop at our first set of double-doors, rusting away and already a crack open. There's no hiding whats on the other side.

"On the count of three, and no slower." Izzy grips the door by the frame while I hold back, waiting for the charge in.

"One, two, three!"

Part of me was expecting the witch to continue the trend of the damaged/destroyed hospital theme but no amount of preparation would have been enough for this. The... aberration in the center of a giant auditorium is scrounged up of countless medical machines. In its center lies an EKG, showing a heart-rate speed not meant for humans, its limbs littered with scalpels, needles and knives connected by tubes and wiring to its back. Its eyes are the only non-metal there, but just being ripped-out pieces of cotton being held together by tiny strings to its head seems like torture to itself.

"That's... it." It takes me a moment to stop the shaking in my hands, readying my mace and entering the room. It wastes no time turning to me and letting out a few electrical hisses as a threat. "Get in here and split up, keep it occupied at two different angles!"

As I bolt out to one side Izzy goes and circles around the room in the other direction. The witch had its gaze on me until it started getting hit from the sides and back by my companion. Some... fluid thing began to drip on the floor and churn the ground to rust.

Shiiiit. We had to end this fast.

Kinda hard to argue amnesia as an excuse IMHO, considering that she knows this might make it worse.

Anyway, its fine if you think thats the reason why she has never sought to make amends. It does make some sense and might well be true.

Ofcourse, it does not paint a pretty picture of Yuma. Mindrape someone, justify it to yourself by saying "she deserved it, its not my fault I had to rape her" and then never even try to make up but just feel glad she does not remember so you cannot be held accountable.

"Izzy, conserve yours shots! I'll get you openings!" I yelled at her from the other side of the room as I charged in at it. A shield was already formed around myself for safety as my mace collided right with it on the sides. As expected a splash of fluids ejected itself from the side I hit it and started to rust the floor. Already some of Izzy's knives were becoming useless from the witches concoction and she soon realized it.

"I'll do more power strikes, just keep the witch on you!" Izzy started to channel her magic into one tomahawk, but as much as I wailed on it the witch eventually took notice and threw -something- at her. Said thing got split and half as a white-hot streak of magic flew right through it and nailed the witch in the chest. Izzy froze after the shot having split a scanner in two; the pieces sticking into the wall right behind her.

The witch writhed in pain as the axe hit her, not to difficult for me to finish off. I scattered what parts fell off of it across the room and didn't stop until a second shot from her nailed it right in the EKG. The witch cried out, the world we were in wavered and I could see the dark of night.

And in the center of a cement path was the blackened soul of a former colleague.

"Nicely done my bitches! Not even my other top-girls noticed that one comin' in!" Izzy reveled in Eightballs compliments while I stood off to the side, keeping the grief seed to myself.

"Well, to be fair, Gina was calling all the shots in there. I don't think just because I'm much more experienced that I should be giving all the praise~." She was also back to her normal self; it would be hard for some to think of her as a cold-hard killer only an hour ago. But I've known her for a long time, and hell, this is the eighth. We're known for that.

"Right, my rising star! Why don't ya hand over the loot over 'ere? It ain't gonna do much shit just bein' looked at ya know." With a light sigh I just tossed the seed over to him with him catching it with his ear-extension-things. Whatever the hell they're called. He'd probably call me on it if I asked him the name for them. "A fine piece of work here. Just gotta see who might've been knocked off from the list. Bitches gotta know their place right?"

"Yes sir." I reply with a grin, standing up from my chair. "We are the eighth, the assassins. We take our job seriously and with the utmost caution. But above all, we got the fucking job DONE, even if it means throwing common rationale beside and doing what needs to be done."

Yea, I think I really am starting to go crazy...

First, I'm not arguing the amnesia as a reason for not trying to make amends; I'm using the amnesia as an example of when Murderface would wake up with no idea who or where she was and would start shooting up her allies like she did when she first woke up or when the Culexus squad had to be called when she had another episode and shot them up.

Second, as I said, I'm not making excuses for the actions that we made Yuma do now, I'm putting forward reasons why Yuma wouldn't have tried to make amends with Murderface between when she did the mindrip and when she met Chiaki in the elevator.

She raped someone. Justified it to herself so she would not have to face what she had done. And is now going on knowing that she can never be caught.

I for one think what she did was both sickening, but potentially redeemable if she really regrets it and tries to make amends. But she is taking no steps to redeem herself, which does make her a pretty horrible person overall.

Now you can argue about the personality and amnesia and so on, but given that there is concrete evidence of people having souls, you could say that an apology to Chiaki (even if she does not remember) would be an apology to Girl A too.

And making amends with Chiaki and gaining her forgiveness would atleast somewhat mean that Girl A forgives too.

She worked at a Chinese place a few years ago, back when she was still off-duty on a regular basis. It was mostly to get away from the people around her, but she picked up a few things.

Wendy's actually one of the two Rabbits that does most of the cooking, the other being Amber (with Dorothy doing a lot of baking). She's pretty indifferent to the other aspect of housewai-fu, though.

Probably Midori, she has more experience in that kind of setting and it's easier to make a hundred bowls of ramen than grill and dress a hundred bacon cheeseburgers.

Blueberry à la Mode

Sometimes, there were days when Miki Sayaka really despised her job.

This was one of them, but at least things were starting to look up. She had finally arrived home and was looking forward to a nice night of kicking off her boots and lounging on the couch. Maybe finish off those raspberries in the fridge if a certain red-haired someone hadn't gotten to them, yet.

Fumbling with the key to her apartment, she couldn't help but sigh in relief as she managed the lock. Eversor physiology be damned, being up and awake for a 16+ hour shift was definitely taking it's toll. Staggering through the front door, she cancelled her transformation with a sigh, not bothering to turn the light on. It was her house, what was she gonna do, trip over Kyoko?

Flopping onto the couch, she tossed her head back, swearing as she stretched. Fucking Murderface, why do you have to be such a bitch sometimes?! Just because you hate meetings doesn't mean you have to drag me along, too!

Hearing a small noise deeper in the apartment, Sayaka glanced behind her, relaxing as she spotted Kyoko's distinctive ponytail in the dim light from under the hall door. 'Guess you wanna play sneaky, eh?' she chuckled to herself, as she felt hands reach up and drape over her shoulders, strong fingers working the muscles underneath.

“Mmm... You know just how I like it honey... A-a little higher, my neck is stiff...” Sayaka purred, leaning back into the massage. This was definitely the best way to come home, ever.

Reaching back with one hand, she stroked her hand through the ponytail behind her, running fingers down it's length. It felt... softer, more silken, then usual... Must'a've just taken a shower, maybe? She grabbed a handful of hair and pulled toward herself, dragging her husband around to kiss and nibble the exposed neck. “Come 'ere, you...”

Sayaka heard a small gasp in the dark above, indicating she had found her mark. Smiling into the warm, fresh scented skin, she chinned around, looking for that one... spot... that she knew Kyoko liked so well.

The hands roaming her shoulders and neck paused a moment, then slid down her front, pressing and palming her chest through her thin shirt. “Someone's feeling worked up tonight, aren't we?” Sayaka groaned quietly, turning her head to grab at the other woman's lower lip, biting gently as she held her hair handhold firm to give a deep kiss. There was a gasp, before the other girl leaned into it, tongue darting into her mouth.

Moaning into the kiss, Sayaka had had enough, grabbing the other girl by the shoulders, and dragging her over the back of the couch. A yelp of surprise later, she had a lap full of husband, and she wasted no time taking advantage of that fact. Running her hands over Kyoko's body, trying to mentally place the outfit she was feeling, trying to remember where the... entrances were.

New outfit, maybe?

Flashing a small smile when she heard a low moan of pleasure, Sayaka stopped when she felt a pair of hands hold hers in place, preventing her from continuing. She paused one second, two, before the hands moved, running along her belly, grabbing the top of her shorts. With a deft, practiced hand the button was open, and the blue haired girl gave a throaty chuckle. “Sure babe, we can start with this!”

The weight rolled from her lap, with a thump below as she saw a grinning face in the dim light. Lifting her hips, she closed her eyes and laid back, hands sliding down her own legs to lightly caress the red-haired girl's cheeks. Wiggling back and forth, she felt her clothing slide down her long legs, slipping down her thighs, then shins. The grinning face below becoming obscured as she leaned forward, and... and did that thing with the tongue.

The undergarments hooked over her left ankle were suddenly lost, flung into the depths of the apartment, as every muscle from her waist down spasm from shock and pleasure.

Coming up for air an inferno of pleasure later, the blue haired woman panted heavily, pushing gently on the others forehead. “Wa-wait a second. Let me... let me catch my breath.” She groaned a little as she felt her hand being kissed, gently along each fingertip. Then the... curious sensation of her ring finger being enveloped in a warm, wet place.

Spell momentarily broken, Sayaka glanced down, cocking her head to the side in confusion. “Are your trying to pull my Soul Gem off with... your mouth?”

Nod, nod.

Too dark to make out the expression on her husband's face, the blue haired girl shrugged, and her Soul Gem burst into it's larger form. The usual flash of light muffled by the girl's mouth closing over the Gem, lips tucked back over teeth, causing Sayaka's eyes to widen. “Wa-wait! Kyoko, hold-! I'm not~!”

Her eyes rolled back, as she felt a warm, hot, wet feeling engulf her entire lower half.

She caught her breath a few eternities later, feeling slender fingers dancing around her inner thighs. She felt like she had been training for hours, and her legs felt so weak, like she had been trying to run to the moon. Feeling a curious, cool sensation on her hot, sticky skin, she tried to lift her weary head, feeling too drunk from pleasure to do more then just ride out her husband's lusty mood.

Her eyes widened, unseeing, as she felt herself... part open. Spread wide, around... herself. As if her own Soul Gem was being pushed gently, firmly, deeply into some place... she had never considered putting a Soul Gem before.

These Soul Gems are Dildos.

Slipping into the brightly light apartment hallway, the dark haired girl panted heavily, hand lightly held to smiling lips, a blush staining her face a deep crimson. She... she had to calm down... be... before...

Fumbling in her pocket, she pulled a pair of thick, red rimmed glasses out, placing them gently on her nose, trying to focus her thoughts. To still her mind. To... quiet the voice inside, swearing at her to give her body back. Screaming that she'd have to scour her own tongue clean with a belt sander. How she'd tear those goddamn braids off her fucking head and beat her to death with them.

Hearing a noise coming from the elevator down the hall, the dark haired girl startled to action, realizing she couldn't stay in front of the scene of... the apartment any longer. She turned and fled, ducking around the corner just as the elevator doors opened, letting a grinning, one-eyed redhead into the hallway.

As she did, Kyoko caught sight of movement down on the other end. Of a long wave of dark hair cutting away, disappearing down the hall. Holding her hand out to call out a greeting, she shrugged, then headed to her own apartment, fishing her keys out of her pocket. It was probably someone else.

It couldn't have been her, could it...? Nah... no way. She had no reason to be here. Kyoko had a long day at work, so her mind must have been playing tricks on her... There was absolutely no reason for her to have been here. She shook her head as she unlocked and opened her door, walking into her dim apartment.

No. It's...no. You didn't have any choice. You had to know.

It's not your fault. It was important. There wasn't any other way. You had to know, or else you would've--

The muffled, fearful crying in the corner - more of a weak, helpless whimpering - makes you turn to look at what's left of the timid girl whose mind you violently ransacked a few moments ago.

Forcing your way into her mind, into her memories. Ripping through them, tearing them apart with the psychic equivalent of cruelly-hooked slashing claws. Just so you could get at what you needed to see.

What you wanted to see.

And you did.

>> ☐ Deculture 04/30/14(Wed)09:56:21 No.31821414

>>31821394

Through her own eyes, through the hazy colors of her own memories, you saw the girl cowering in front of you stagger into a bar, ordering drink after drink.

You saw your Warmaster, tall and bladed and grinning, meeting her and talking about a certain blonde Vindicare. A Vindicare with a saint's smile, a sun's warmth and the sweetness of honey in her voice.

Insults and jibes were traded, until the girl herself staggered off again, clearly irate. Stumbling off into an alley, cursing every step of the way. Ignoring the iron-shod footfalls of your Warmaster behind her, and her half-laughed, half-cackled calls.

It was here that the assassins made their presence known.

Dark forms, seeping out of the shadows, shimmering with the tell-tale concealing magic of a Callidus.

Even with her vision blurred and unsteady, Girl A manages to dodge the first blade flying towards her, and ducks underneath the second. The third is shot out of the air with an oversized firearm that had not been there a moment ago, and the wielder of the fourth is killed before they could even charge at her.

Then, a burst of crippling pain. And another. And Girl A is sent crashing to her knees, two blades buried deep into her spine. More and more shadows converges upon her, intent on taking her to pieces. A growled denial, a gun raised, and Girl A prepares to die fighting.

Kharn arrives with the instantaneous death of three of the assassins, all of them bisected at the waist. But unlike the many instances where you've seen your Warmaster slaughter her enemies, no laughter colors her voice, no cackle leaves her lips along with a gleefully-uttered screed of insults. She kills in panicked, desperate silence, black eyes wide and staring, completely focused on rescuing Girl A.

She kills and kills and kills, but the shadows kept coming. As if whoever had planned this had brought an entire rank - no, an entire Officio. More than enough to kill a monster like the Warmaster of the Ninth - or maybe barely enough, as they continued to die with each butchering stroke of Skulltaker's burning blade.

Thirty shadows die before Kharn is struck down. Her sword arm chopped off at the shoulder with a lucky, desperate ax blow - the culprit's skull cleaved in half with a savage retaliatory kick from the Warmaster's bladed feet. She picks up the sputtering, meat-choked hulk of Skulltaker with her remaining hand and kills five more before the most ruinous wound she will ever get bites into her flesh.

A black dagger, stabbed right into her heart, slid between her ribs. Kharn's mouth opens in a surprised gasp, and Skulltaker crashes to the floor, shattering concrete and asphalt. Her free hand - clawed and dripping with gore - scrabbles against the shadow embracing her, attempting to claw its face off. Blood, frothy and black, bubbles through her gritted teeth, trickling down curled-back lips.

You...you didn't bother viewing the rest. You could imagine.

Malal was telling the truth, right down to the last detail. Your paranoia and mistrust debunked, proven to be just as baseless and flimsy as your suspicion of her betrayal.

You should be overjoyed right now, or at the very least, content. You've proven Malal's innocence - both to yourself and to anyone who might ever suspect her.

Just a cold emptiness coring you right through.

At the corner of the room, her dress soiled with her tears and the blood from where she'd bitten her tongue during your ransacking of her already-shattered mind - Girl A starts to cry for anyone to save her. A barely-coherent appeal for her Angel to rescue her, to make everything stop hurting.

I wonder why Girl A refers to Malal as an "angel"?

I guess pre-corruption Madokami was a sort of angelic figure. Maybe the approach of WN(can't spell the damn thing) has caused Homura to somehow subconsciously remember things and Girl A views Malal as an angel because she somehow senses who she is?

Yuma did not trust Malal, thought she was a traitor.

There were two votes between rape and leaving (first was tie). The vote that won was to mindrape Girl A in order to get all the information out of her head.

The problem is that this is not really Homura. Heck, even Chiaki is no longer like that. So it does not really apply.

The second problem is that Deculture wrote in the previous thread (when the rape happened, it was disturbing to read with Girl A begging for mercy) that Yuma was not doing it for noble reasons, but simply to satisfy her personal need to know. So the ends did not justify the means, since the end result was always pointless.

I disagree.

Well partly. I do think the people who voted for this are indeed retards, but the way the story works is that the characters act how we telll them to act, and their personalities are what we say they are.

So yes, in the story, Yuma is now the kind of person that would mindrape a helpless girl to satisfy her personal curioisity. The fact that the players voted for it does not change that basic fact.

Thats how quest threads work. We said Yuma is a mindrapist, so now she is one. Can't turn back the clock.

So either we watched a genuine memory and Malal did not mindfuck Girl A or she did, reformatted her on the spot and implanted false memories.

Because people work like that. There is no logic behind that, its pure emotion. You see something everyday that reminds of how hard you fucked up you react with spite.

Well, he gave us a vote (which was extremely close, which is probably why there is so much conflict about the decision) so no.

Last thread, we got the chance to choose the character of Yuma. Was she the kind of person who would mindrape someone. Or was she the kind of person that would not do something sick like that. We chose she was a rapist (well I voted to leave girl A alone but the majority rules).

We could have chosen that Yuma is not the kind of person who would do that, in which case presumably Yuma would have had other reasons for her bitchiness.

What I meant was that its a valid reason _in-universe_ for Yuma to feel guilt and then blame her victim, giving a reason for her bitchiness. A disgusting reason, but a reason.

However, in _real life_, the thread where Yuma was a bitch came BEFORE this flashback did, which means that as far as Deculture and the players were concerned, the rape had not happened yet (the vote could potentially have gone the other way).

So unless Deculture can see the future, that was not the original reason for Yumas behaviour.

Oh man, that sounds awesome. I hope this is, like, a delayed reaction or something and that Yuma gets to see that.

It would be interesting and horrifying to see, what? An 11 year old girl suddenly have to deal with over a thousand years of failure.

Amazing

I remember that Dildoes yelled it, and odds are the incarnations in DEagle remember this incident even if Chiaki does not.

If we assume that Deculture planned to have Yuma do something nasty in this flashback, then that could be the reason why Dildoes warns us about Yuma.

It's...you can't leave her like this. You can't do what you just did and then leave as if it didn't mean anything. You have to say something. Anything. Just...say something.

You open your mouth from behind your helmet's faceplate, trying to give voice to the very concept of impossibility, to futility - as the reality of just what you did continues to sink in. As the full realization of the sin you've just committed - all in the name of balming your own fucking conscience - finally dawns on you.

What do you say to someone whose trust you just betrayed in the most horrible way possible?

What kind of apology heals a wound inflicted with such cold, unflinching cruelty, to someone who had earlier smiled and talked to you like you were her friend?

"I'm--"

One word. One fucking syllable is all you get out before Girl A screams again, not just in alarm but in complete hysterical fear. More empty, half-assembled rifles clatter to the ground as she continues to kick away from you, pressing herself further into the corner she's cowering in, as if desperately trying to put as much distance between the both of you as possible despite already pressing up against the walls.

More sobbed appeals for her Angel to come and stop the monster in front of her from making her forget again. Bloodied fingers and palms pressing against her tightly-clenched eyelids, frantically seeking that one last bastion of calm by just blocking out all sight of you and pretending you're gone. Smearing her face with crimson fingerprints and lining her cheeks with muddy carmine tears.

What have you done?

What the fuck have you done, you stupid FUCKING IDIOT?

You close the door to Girl A's quarters behind you, exhaling only after you hear all the locks re-engage themselves automatically. The thick, solid door between the both of you muffling the girl's cries to a sound you can ignore but never forget.

This...no one can know what you did. Not Cavefish, not Kyoko, not Malal. What you did went far and beyond what you falsely accused your Rank Leader of. It was one thing to torture an enemy for information, to use excruciation as a means of supplementing interrogation - but to force your way through an already fragile mind, an ordeal already torturous and possibly fatal on a healthy one--

A sudden beeping sound out chirping out of nowhere very nearly makes you jump out of your suit, and you nervously spit out an epithet as you realize that Malal is calling you. ...Shit. Shit shit shit. ...She couldn't have known so fast, t-that's impossible. Not even she was that good.

You take a moment to compose yourself, to calm your quickened, frantic breathing, and it's here that you accept her call. Praying fervently that your voice wouldn't tremble this time.

"Omegon, how are things going?" Malal greets you without any preamble or hesitation. "Said goodbye to Haruka yet? We're a bit short on time, though, so I'll have to ask you to wrap it up. Oh, and how was Kharn, by the way?"

...Wait, what? Haruka? But you haven't even visited Kharn yet!

It's here, then, that you see the Walpurgisnacht counter at the upper right corner of your retinal display. The display reading 00:01:28:33.

What. WHAT.

You still had the best part of three hours earlier, back in Girl A's headquarters! How did you lose an hour and half by just talking to her?! It was--

She probably has much less future sight about what someone "unrelated" like Yuma will do. Neither Madoka or Homura ever really had a major connection to Yuma.

Probably the people who voted against rape.

You do realise that there were two votes for this. The first was a perfect tie, and in the second vote, rape won by 1 vote. The playerbase was divided in half about this.

Yuma is what the majority says she is. Thats how the game is played and everyone has to accept that. But that does not mean that the minority cannot hate her for what she has become now.

Some may be upset simply because their side lost the vote, but I suspect most are immersed in the story and are disgusted with what Yuma has done and become.

As others have said above, Deculture writing it as it was and bringing the horror of it to the text probably helped there.

Not the guy you responded to, but Rebellion was great.
The original series' ending always felt incomplete especially with regards to Homura's character arc, which was left hanging when her motivation to keep going suddenly up and vanished from the universe.
Rebellion was a great exploration of all those hanging questions and plot threads, and a great Act 2 to the story as a whole.
Now I can only hope that they get that second season, so we can get our Act 3, and find out where this Wild Ride goes.

You clear your throat a couple of times, before replying to the affirmative. Yes, you...you did visit Kharn. You did, in fact, go down to Silent Room Regalia earlier. And the Warmaster was just like Malal said - dying, and a hair's breadth from Witching Out.

First suspecting your role model of betrayal and subterfuge - and now lying to her? Right to her face?

"Hnh." You hear Malal grunt here, and you could swear you could feel her eyes boring at you through the visor of her own Anima Speculum helmet. As if seeing right through your deception even before you've uttered it, and simply waiting for you to come clean.

"...No change from the last time I visited, then." The Culexus finally speaks up a few heartbeats later, her spiked shoulderplates jostling slighty as she shrugs. "Could mean that her body's started the healing process already. Could mean the exact opposite, too. But at least she hasn't gotten worse."

Y-yeah. Of course. That should be good news at least. ...You're pretty sure the Warmaster will be fine, though. She's like a weed - too hardy and annoying of a nuisance to actually die.

Malal guffaws at that. "Hah! I like that so much, I'm going to steal it for myself and tell it to her face when she's up and about. Snow-shoveling yokel like her'll think it's a compliment, and probably give me that raise I want." She chuckles again, before nodding at you with something approaching approval in her voice. "You know, Omegon, if Walpurgisnacht isn't about to bust into reality an hour and a half from now, I'd step down from Equerry and name you my replacement."

H-huh? Replacement? B-but--

"On a temporary basis, at least. Just to get your feet wet for this role when you actually DO Have to replace me." Malal shakes her head, incredulity coloring her words. "What, did you think I was going to be Equerry forever?"

"It's really either you or Kyoko, you know? But I don't think she'd appreciate it much if I tore the eternal lovebirds apart just because I wanted to retire while I'm still alive." Another gargling chuckle. "But yeah, if all this shit wasn't happening..." She shrugs. "Well, we don't really know what's going to happen when we deploy. Hopefully it'll all go as planned and we won't have to add too many portraits to the Hall of Anamnesis."

Y-yeah. Yeah, of course. You hope so, too.

You close your eyes momentarily, unable to meet Malal's gaze for a second more. It's...it's ridiculous. You can't even see her eyes, but you can't even look at her fucking visor.

This must be what a fucking coward and liar feels like, you think bitterly.

"Anyway, I just called to check up on you. When you're ready, get to the General Assembly Hall - Kharn's finished her speech and the Eversors're filing out. If you hurry, you can catch Kyoko and Sayaka before they leave."

Malal ends the call, her portrait vanishing from your retinal display - and it's here that you feel your knees begin their slow metamorphosis to weak, boneless jelly. Very nearly buckling your legs underneath you.

You did it. You actually fucking did it.

You lied to Malal. It's not your proudest moment.

And now you have to make a decision. With the rapidly-dwindling amount of time left, you can only pick one.

[]Go straight to the General Assembly Hall to say goodbye to Kyoko and Sayaka, and meet with Malal.

[]Run for it and meet Harukaone last time. Not being able to say goodbye to Kyoko and Sayaka is a shame, but...you need to talk to someone. Someone who won't judge you and forgive you for what you've done.

I can see it now, Yuma hates Murderface because Yuma can't apologize for what she did. Murderface thankfully doesn't remember, but Yuma does and it agonizes her. She did something terrible, something that cannot be undone an the one she did it to doesn't even remember.

There can be no redemption, no forgiveness, and Yuma has to live with that unless she forces chiaki to remember which could just make things worse.

How would the officio react if they found out the last culexus mindraped their warmaster?

I think that is why Yuma hates chiaki, because everyday she reminds Yuma of something that Yuma can't get rid of the guilt of doing. Yuma can't even find sanctuary in being hated, she can only hate herself.

Fuck you, you stupid fuck.
Of course this is a game, as defined by having discrete choices which lead to individualized results and consequences.

Since choices lead to different and unique ends, some ends will be more desirable than others, and the game is to try to get to an end that is preferred over others, resulting in a matrix of choices and allowing them to be ranked by desirability.

Your definition of game can literally apply to almost everything.

The end that I desire is the one with the most interesting story, not the one where everyone ends up happy. You can vote against me in this, but don't tell me that my interpretation is any less valid than your own. I think Yuma is more interesting and narratively solid now that her hands are stained with metaphorical blood that she can't wash off, and it gives a whole new light to her previous scenes in the future.

Basically, stop telling me that I'm having fun wrong and go fuck yourself with a cactus.

This anon gets it, Deculture has planned this all in advance. The voting, the suffering, the euphoria, the faggotry, the rage.

Just let it all go, what is done is done. We need to stop slapping each other and start figuring out what it all will mean when the flashback is over.

My fear is that Yuma will fall into despair an the only way to save her will be for chiaki to remember what Yuma did to her, the pain, the fear, the shame, the betrayal, the lying, all of it will come out and cause chiaki some possibly serious mental harm, and cause her to seek d eadly answers, such as who was bitch with the black dagger.

The difference between a quest and a story is that reader input can guide it, but you can't call it less of a story just because people made a choice you didn't like.

Also I like this, it's a really dark but understandable action that's given us all someone to root for or against, and strong feelings about it.

Okay, you dumb shit, let me explain it to you again.

You're already playing this as a game since you're making choices against your own internal metric of what is interesting versus what is not, trying to get the ending that YOU want.
I never said that your interpretation of choices was any less valid than mine.

What I said was that this IS a game, not collaborative narration, because everyone is trying to achieve their ends through votes for choices at points determined by a QM. Collaborative narration would allow any one of us to suggest something completely different, the addition of a character, the removal of one, adding, removing, or modifying a part of the world.

Do you understand the difference now?

Alright, you dumb cat, since you can't seem to understand this.
A choice can't be objectively correct, because a choice has to be measured against a desired outcome, whether that's toward an "ideal end" or an "interesting end".
A choice can be correct if End A is desired, and be incorrect if End B is desired.
The people saying that such thought is powergaming bullshit are themselves guilty of the same bullshit, since their goal is to get an "interesting end" and they make their choices based upon that goal.

As for this definition of a game being applicable to just about anything; yes, that's the goddamn point! Most things are games, because interesting choices are being made that lead to individualized outcomes between decision makers.

Then their metric is based upon how closely the choice they make hews to their interpretation of a character, and their end goal is to have an end that most closely resembles a series of choices that the characters would have made without outside interference.

You can't get away from a goal, because that's always in the intention of a choice you make.

"… is it valuable?"

"Yes."

"… how much is it worth?"

"I don't know."

"Well, maybe I could-"

"Lightning, are we going to do this every time?"

Magical Girl Lightning stood over her compatriot, coworker, colleague, friend, etcetera, Magical Girl Liberty. The two of them were agents working for the United States Strategic Services Office (SSO), and their current mission for the day was to retrieve a very particular artifact.

As it stands, the artifacts that they're occasionally called to retrieve to be put into "special storage" to be examined by "top men" usually fell under archaeological standards. Liberty's mother would have probably throw a hissyfit over what was done with these artifacts, to Liberty's silent amusement as she thought of it. Whether it be some fertility idol that actually does enhance a person's fertility, or a sword said to be lost to time and space reappearing and trying to convince people to wield it, Liberty and Lightning have more or less seen it all.

This was different.

They found it while exploring the darkest reaches of the unstable and ferocious island of Skull Island. It was in one of the older temple ruins in the inner part of the island, just sitting there on a pedestal, lit only by a ray of light beaming from a hole in the ceiling. It was small enough to fit in the palm of Liberty's hand. The black little egg shaped wonder had thorns out the top and the bottom, and from inside Liberty and Lightning could see it swirl like a dark cloud.

Something about it felt off to Liberty, as if wrong, alien even.

Liberty curled her hand around it, gripping it tightly. "Well, there's no time to talk about it. We have to get out of here."

Lightning pointed to the little thing in Liberty's hand. "Dibs on the money we make from that though."

"What is it about you and money?" asked Liberty. "I would've expected this from a girl with the last name of Goldstein, not Kawanishi."

Lightning shrugged, smirking. "Hey, money makes the world go round, doesn't it?"

"That-" Liberty stopped herself. Who knows what would happen if she got dragged into this darn argument again. "Come on."

Liberty led Lightning back down the way they came up the stone, mossy hallway. The old Natives of Skull Island were a mysterious bunch even to the most dedicated historian. Their way of living wasn't exactly Mayan, nor Incan or Aztec, nor was it exactly cannibal even though they do practice cannibalism, nor was it aboriginal. It was just pure and simple, savage. Skull Island was more or less a recent find, and what Liberty's Dad had taught her about it, apparently it wouldn't be a find for long.

Lightning still glanced at the artifact occasionally, as if summing up all the dollars or yen or whatever she used as currency she could get if she sold the thing. Liberty ignored it for now, it wasn't like it was harming her anyway. Besides, Lightning and Liberty have worked together for a good while, betrayal wouldn't just come out of the blue like that.

Lightning said, "Strange really."

"What?" asked Liberty.

Lightning wagged her finger, looking around. "You'd figure that this temple would have some traps or something to keep grave robbers out."

Liberty said, “Well, think of it like this, Lightning. Would you really be able to design traps that would survive hundreds, if not thousands, of years into the future?”

“You’re asking me?”

Liberty sighed. “I suppose you’re not wrong.”

With that, their eyes were blinded as they sighted the exit out. There’s always something about seeing the light at the end of a tunnel, as if it were finding your way into heaven. Liberty was no God fearing girl like the rest of her former Girl Scout compatriots. She sung the hymns, but she certainly didn’t pray before she slept or say grace before she ate. Something about being a Magical Girl made you a bit less religious. It sure wasn’t enlightening nor was it euphoric. It just kind of was.

And to that end, they stepped outside to the cocked guns of a platoon of Nazi soldiers. Not just any soldiers mind you, these were soldiers of Hitler’s own Magisch Korps. Huge, hulking troops in black heavy body armor, trenchcoats, gasmasks and helmets. They had assault rifles, anti-magic rifles, anti-magic machetes, everything to combat Magical Girls.

These were Gegenmagischtruppen.

>>-[| Tier Four Wundersoldaten |]=<<

“Oh boy,” said Lightning, glaring at them. “It’s these Gegen…” Lightning paused, shifting her eyes a little. “Gegen… whatever the hell they’re called!”

“-Magischtruppen.” Into the ring of troopers walked a woman. She was clad in her immaculate military uniform, an armband with a swastika signifying her allegiance to the Nazi Party of Germany. Her peaked cap shaded her scarlet eyes hidden behind a smart pair of glasses, and between her lips was a fresh cigarette. She smirked, gesturing to Lightning. “You have worked in the Fuhrer’s service before, have you not, Lightning? I would have assumed you would have picked up on the terminology.”

Lightning crossed her arms, puffing her cheeks out at the Nazi girl. “Well, Engelhardt. If you didn’t have like twenty different guys with thirty different names, I probably would have remembered!” She kicked the dirt a bit, walking behind Liberty. “Didn’t even work with you guys that long anyway, should have paid me better,” she muttered.

Liberty said, “Why are you here, Engelhardt? I thought the Nazis were all about burning books and erasing history, not archaeology.”

Engelhardt frowned mocking. “I am shocked, Liberty. I happen to be a good friend of the Ahnenerbe. They’re all made up of very good and well-respected historians of the ancient era. They work hard to prove Aryan superiority unlike you and your mother who simply rob the graves of the old and ancient.” She shrugged, holding her hand out. “I suppose it cannot be helped. Hand over the Grief Seed.”

Lightning and Liberty glanced at each other. “The what?” asked Liberty.

Engelhardt looked at them as if they had just frenched each other in front of her. “Excuse me? The thing in your hand. The Grief Seed.” Liberty and Lightning looked at each other, still confused. “Are you serious- Do you call yourselves Magical Girls and not know what a Grief Seed is?”

“Yes,” said Lightning.

Engelhardt huffed. “Hand it to me, now.” Liberty and Lightning stepped back, readying themselves. In response, the troopers cocked their weapons, the anti-magic rifles glowing and whining to life. Liberty assessed the situation, they had the drop on her and Lightning. This would get ugly fast and she didn’t know how fragile the artifact was. “You are in no position to argue. Hand it over,” said Engelhardt firmly.

Lightning looked over at Liberty. Liberty looked back, raising an eyebrow. Lightning shrugged, and gestured over to Engelhardt wordlessly.

To that, Liberty said, “Fine.” She underhand tossed the Grief Seed towards Engelhardt, who quickly scrambled to catch it as if were a fine painting of the Fuhrer himself. She dusted herself off, tightening her fist around the Grief Seed, then smiled at two Magical Girls. “Thank you.” She turned around then began walking back into the woods, escorted by a personal bodyguard of two Gegenmagischtruppen. She stopped towards the platoon leader, then looked back at Liberty. “You know the principles of anti-magic, don’t you, Liberty?” Liberty glared at Engelhardt, balling her hands into fists. “Oh, of course, it was your father’s work after all,” she said. She looked over at the platoon leader. “Kill them.”

With that, Engelhardt left. The Gegenmagischtruppen readied their weapons and prepared to fire.

Lightning smirked. “So, it’s about twenty to two.”

Liberty nodded, steadying herself. “Yep.”

“They don’t stand a chance.” Lightning willed her magical naginata to appear, spinning it above her head and then slamming the blade into the ground to the sound of thunder.

The Battle of Agincourt was well known for its one-sidedness. There, the English stopped the French with huge amounts of arrows as the latter came rushing at them on horseback and on foot through a muddy field. Massive casualties for the French ensued, and it still serves today as an important lesson in rushing a superior force that has the advantage even despite outnumbering them.

A Gegenmagischtruppen howled as he rushed at Liberty, anti-magic machete held high over his head. Liberty turned around after bashing one’s skull in, then slid down to a crouch and slammed her shield’s rim against the trooper’s knee to a meaty crunch. The trooper fell over, gripping his leg.

Lightning dropped down from a flash of violet energy, smashing the trooper’s neck with her boot and slicing a charging trooper in half at the chest with her naginata casually. Liberty back-flipped over her and then tossed her shield at a trooper, smashing his rifle in his hands. She tossed her other shield, applying a good spin to it as the shield zoomed and flew right into the trooper’s gut with a loud ping, sending him flying into a tree trunk.

Liberty’s shields returned to her like boomerangs, and then shrunk to buckler size at her command. Lightning looked around, a bit peeved that twenty guys specifically trained to kill Magical Girls just got wrecked by them. Their corpses and body parts all laid on the ground, blood pooling into the dirt.

“Man,” said Lightning. “I was expecting a challenge.”

“We’re not out of the woods yet,” said Liberty as they stood in the woods. “We have to get that artifact.”

They blazed through the woods, hopping over roots, smashing through trees, jumping through branches and shrub. They didn’t have time to admire the long-thought extinct fauna of Skull Island. Not even the killer birds or insects could catch them as they flew past, disturbing the forest and leaving a wake of floating leaves, kicked up dirt, and scorched grass.

The two of them stopped at the edge of a steep cliff, right outside of the forest. Liberty pointed, yelling, “There!”

She pointed across the deep valley and towards the convoy of vehicles moving up the steep narrow mountain road. Everything from armored cars, to tanks, to halftracks and trucks. Thirty vehicles to be precise. Right behind the leading vehicle was a heavy car with Engelhardt sitting comfortably in the passenger seat. Lightning grinned, gripping her naginata at the ready and crouching at a pounce. “Let’s do this!” she said.

Liberty stepped behind Lightning and then brought her shields up. She spun around for a punch at Lightning, bringing the full broadside of her shield at Lightning. Lightning jumped at Liberty, feet first. With a loud ping, she went sailing across the valley like a rocket. She slammed full force into the middle vehicle, an unlucky truck full of troops, sending it flying into the mountainside full force and crushing the men inside. Lightning flashed into the air above her and landed in the bed of a halftruck, slicing and dicing her way through the troops inside casually.

Okay, that was one thing done. Liberty tossed her shields across the valley one by one. Then she jumped, using her shields as stepping stones to get across. At the final jump, she hopped up with great power and landed on the hood of another truck, sending it end over end on top of another truck, sending it out of control and flying right off the road into the valley below. Liberty landed on the road with a dusty thud then caught the next vehicle coming, hopping into the back.

Right amongst a squad of Gegenmagischtruppen armed with shields and stunprods. Liberty held her arms out, and her shields flew back to her wrists. It's time for a little bit of freedom. They all charged at her in the narrow space of the truck, to which Liberty punched and bashed their faces in. One tried for a stab at her gut with his stunprod, only for Liberty to sidestep, grab him by the neck and toss him under the wheels of the following vehicle.

With the bed of the truck secure, she hopped up onto the cab and then swung the door open, quickly pulling a stormtrooper out and tossing him off the roadside and into the valley. She swung inside feet first, kicking the driver out, slamming him into the mountainside. Liberty quickly found her footing, and then sat up in the driver's seat, to the sight of the Panzer II in front turning the turret around at Liberty. The autocannon aimed and blasted the cab with a full burst of 20mm armor-piercing high-explosive rounds. Good thing Liberty ducked at the last minute, as the truck's engine was now ruined and completely on fire, not to mention the cab looked a bit like melted Swiss cheese now.

"Heads up!" Lightning hopped over Liberty's truck, yelling as she brought her naginata over her head, then landed behind the tank, slicing the tank in half with a burst of violet violent energy. The two pieces glowed red at the cuts as they split off in two different directions, one going off the cliff and the other crashing into the mountainside. The unfortunate crew bailed out end over end. Lightning backflipped over and next to Liberty, grinning. "Impressed?" she asked.

Liberty stood up as the truck began snaking out of control. "I will be if we catch Engelhardt. Let's go!"

Liberty and Lightning jumped away from the truck, letting it explode violently behind them as they caught the next vehicle, a halftrack right behind Engelhardt's personal car. Engelhardt raised herself up from her seat, looking to see Liberty and Lightning make short work of the occupants in the halftrack's bed. She motioned to the four girls in uniform sitting in back, to which they stood and hopped onto the hood of the halftrack. They grinned, drawing their weapons, fine swords and blades glowing with anti-magical energy.

Liberty hopped onto the other wall, keeping her feet steady as Court Sword and Sabre, the twin girls, drew their weapons at her in identical stances. The two girls slashed and sliced at Liberty's shield, forcing her onto the back wall as the halftrack shook with every bump and rock in the road. "You could be more!" said Court Sword. "You could be superior!" said Sabre. "You could be one of us!" they both said.

Liberty ducked a slash then uppercut Court Sword off the halftrack and back into Engelhardt's car. She then shield bashed Sabre back into the bed. To that, Liberty said, "With a performance like that, I'm not keen." She hopped onto the halftrack's hood, then skipped across onto the trunk of Engelhardt's car. "Give up the Grief Seed, Engelhardt!"

Engelhardt grinned madly, standing her seat and holding the Grief Seed in her hands. "Or what, you'll kill me?" Liberty smacked the rim of her shield into Engelhardt's chest, doubling her over and dropping the Seed in the backseat.

Liberty scrambled to pick it up, only for Rapier to hop over and slash at her, drawing blood across Liberty's cheek. Too close. The two fought, throwing punches and slashes, uppercuts and stabs, but neither managing to land a good hit on each other. Rapier chuckled as she brushed her braided ponytail off her shoulder. "You can't hope to defeat me! I am Lady Engelhardt's most favored swordmaster!"

She was immediately checked by Knives' body plowing into her at full speed, knocking the both of them onto the road. Lightning hopped onto the trunk, smiling. "Ha! You owe me!" she said.

Liberty rolled her eyes then picked up the Grief Seed. The driver made a move for a pistol, only for Lightning to quickly slice his head off, his body falling out of the car and sending it spinning out of control. It caught a rock on its wheel, and Liberty and Lightning hopped onto the road right before it capsized, throwing its occupants onto the ground. The two Magical Girls quickly dusted themselves off and checked that they had the Grief Seed still. Liberty held it in its hands, it was still no worse for wear.

Then they turned around to see the lead vehicle. A massive armored truck backing up to them. The doors on back flew open as the hulking trooper stepped out, the ground shattering from his sheer weight. He stood at seven feet, clad in the heaviest armor, wielding a 30mm Cannon, his face hidden behind gasmask and helmet. His eyes were obscured by the glowing red lenses of his gasmask. On his belt were three soul gems, their lights dimmed as they shook and clattered with every step he took. Lightning and Liberty balked, stepping backwards as he climbed out of the truck, cocking the Cannon and letting his immense shadow engulf them. They knew who he was.

His cannon whirred as he brought it up to his hip. Liberty and Lightning jumped out of the way as he fired a full burst of 30mm Minengeschoss ammunition, blasting the road to pieces and setting nearby moss and brush aflame on contact. Lightning flash stepped around to his side and swung, only for the Storm Ace to block it with his cannon and push her away. Liberty charged, her shields spinning like circular saws and glowing with red hot energy. The Storm Ace dropped his cannon and planted his feet firmly on the ground, catching both punches from Liberty in his hands. Liberty pushed against him, her shields cutting into the Storm Aces hands, the smell of burnt flesh not even affecting her as the Storm Ace took the damage in the same way that a mountain took wind erosion.

"He's mine!" Lightning yelled as she recovered. She rushed at him, only for the Storm Ace to grab on tight to Liberty's shields and toss her right at Lightning, knocking them both to the ground on top of each other. They quickly picked themselves up and looked to see a charging squad of Gegenmagischtruppen running at them past the Storm Ace.

The two Magical Girls charged in return, bashing, punching, and slicing their way through. The troopers tried firing their rifles, their shots getting absorbed by Liberty's shields or missing Lightning entirely. Liberty punched and threw troopers out of her way, but the Storm Ace cut in with a hard fist to the face, sending her sliding across the ground and into the back of the truck's wheel. Lightning grabbed a fallen trooper's rifle and fired full auto at the Storm Ace, the bullets putting visible holes into the Storm Ace's heavy armor, but doing nothing else but get his attention. He stomped over and backhanded Lightning, sending her to the dirt ground. Lightning yelled as she held her cheek, "Why won't you die!?"

The Storm Ace responded with a boot to her face, being only a good step away from crushing her head against the ground. Lightning yelled incoherently, kicking and screaming. "Let her go!" shouted Liberty as she tossed her shield at the Storm Ace. He caught it an inch from his face, throwing it to the ground. Liberty rushed at him, screaming as she punched the Storm Ace in the gut, forcing him off Lightning. The Storm Ace took Liberty's punches like a complete champion, then raised his arm to punch. Liberty quickly brought her shield up, blocking the punch with a loud clang which echoed throughout the valley. The weight of the Storm Ace's punch dented her shield with an imprint of his fist and forced her a few inches into the ground.

Lightning got up and stepped next to Liberty, brandishing her naginata as the Storm Ace pulled his fist from Liberty's shield and stepped back. Liberty willed her dropped shield to return to her free wrist and prepared herself as reinforcements came in, more Gegenmagischtruppen, lesser Storm Elite, and larger and more powerful Magischjaeger wielding chainguns. They stepped back, wielding their weapons defensively as the guns were brought to bear. Numbers were just about to win the day.

Engelhardt and her four girls stepped out from the crowd, apparently no worse for wear. Engelhardt's face was hardened by a bit of frustration. "Enough games, Lady Liberty. The Grief Seed. Now."

Lightning said, "We can take you all on! Come at us!" Liberty nudged her with her elbow, urging her to shut up.

"What's so important about this thing?" asked Liberty. "Is it worth sending a quarter of the Magisch Korps at us?"

"I'd sacrifice the entire Korps for one," said Engelhardt. She held up a hand, to which the troopers raised their rifles, cocking them threateningly. "You know I honor my word, Liberty."

Liberty and Lightning frowned, standing back to back. There must have been dozens, but with the Storm Ace and the Four, they'd get overwhelmed eventually. Not to mention Engelhardt's true power.

Then Liberty's ears perked up. The air was getting disturbed. Liberty grinned. "You want it, Engelhardt?" She willed her shields back into her gloves, holding the Grief Seed out. Engelhardt looked confused a second. Lightning stepped behind Liberty, grabbing her arm tight. "Come get it," said Liberty.

In a few seconds, Liberty and Lightning were pulled up by a ladder hanging from a Hughes Autogyro, piloted by Magical Girl Bomber. Engelhardt swore in German, yelling loudly for her troops to fire. Tracers filled the sky as the Autogyro ducked and weaved, missing shots as Bomber expertly piloted the contraption away. Lightning and Liberty clung to the ladder, grinning as Engelhardt screamed to the heavens.

Liberty yelled, "So long you lousy Kraut bastards!"

Engelhardt screamed to the sky as her troops rushed to their vehicles, keen on following her. "Curse you, Liberty!"

The Autogyro flew away as Liberty and Lightning climbed into the backseat, ready to return to their zeppelin of call.

Lily's had small parts in a couple of writeups but probably won't show up in the main quest for a while, and even then not in any strong sense. I've been surprised before.

Eve is pretty firmly in the Eighth and probably won't show up in the main quest, but may feature a little bit more in another thing I'm kicking around.

They're both major characters in an AU a few years down the line where the Unified Nations Party of Japan used the Yakumo to control witches and launch a large-scale attack on the United States as Warchief Lily Hartford of the Eighth and Eve Pearlharbor, the successor of the will of the El Santo Student Council, the US's finest defense against the nationalist puella.

That is actually a thing I've kicked around writing, but probably won't actually do.

Agreed. Officio who is most concerned about taking down witches in the most efficient manner is least likely to employ Callidus'es in their operations. However I deposit that them being invovled in the attack, while unlikely, is still a possibility. The losses suffered by their Black Templar squad fit the timeframe. They are foremost Witch hunting group so supposedly they have an advantage against Kharn due to the things done to her in the past. The bodies were removed from the site, which makes a cover up possible by showing up after the Walpurgisnacht has blown over to make their claims of betrayal. The way Kharn disects her victims is distinctive enough to act as proof for such an occassion. Lastly I'd say with how Ahriman turned about to be cuckoo for cocopuffs, there is a chance some are like that in other officios.

Now that is just baseless speculation on my part. QB was informed by Malal what happened to Kharn, so if the 2nd's claims of betrayal were filthy lies then he would have known and acted accordingly. Feel free to disregard my ramblings.

Turning on your heel, you run. You run as fast as your legs allow you to, as fast as the suit allows you to, and then some. As fast as you possibly can, to the one person who can help you. To the one person who won't judge you for what you did.

You'll tell her what you did. You'll tell her, and she'll smile, and she'll forgive you. She'll say that you were right to do what you did, and that you shouldn't blame yourself, and...and everything will be alright again.

>>31843876

You'll be able to stand and fight with the rest of your squad, with the rest of the Culexus, with Miss Malal - and whatever happens, you can face your death with a clean conscience, and a clean spirit.

Who knows, you may even come out of this alive, with Cavefish and Miss Malal and the rest, a-and...and this'll be something you'll eventually forget about. It'll be as if nothing happened.

Yes. Of course. That's...that's right. Everything'll be okay, and you can go back to worrying about Walpurgisnacht instead of...this. Instead of what you did.

You just need to get to Haruka, and everything'll be just the way it was.

You've gone to her Silent Room many times before that you could run it full-out with your eyes closed. It takes you five minutes to do so - five minutes taken out of your one-and-a-half hours left in this world, five minutes that you'll have to lie to Malal about as well. But you're past the point of caring, now. She can dress you down all she wants to, later. You just need to do this, and everything will be okay.

Shrieking the verbal passcode as you burst into her cloistered-off Silent Room - the loaded gatling gun sentries tracking you for a couple of seconds, before flipping upwards as your haggard, breath-stolen shout is deciphered and verified - and you hear Haruka gasp as you throw the door of her Silent Room open, a cup of tea in her hands.

"Y-Yuma-san? Aren't you supposed to be deployed already--"

You cross the distance between you in two quick boot-falls - your helmet thudding into the carpeted floor by your feet - and you bury your face into her gown-covered chest as you loudly and pathetically begin to cry.

Crying the same way that Girl A had did earlier, as you tore her mind apart for secrets that weren't even there in the first place.

Crying as you remember how she begged and pleaded for you to stop, for you not to hurt her anymore.

"Yuma-san..." Haruka murmurs, and you feel her slowly return your embrace, one arm curling around your waist, while a hand gently runs its fingers through your unruly hair. "Shh. It's fine. It's fine, Yuma-san. I'm here. Let it out. You'll feel better for it."

And you do so. You have no idea where all of this is coming from - the last time you cried was back when you were still uncontracted, when your father used your scalp as an ashtray.

But it's...good. It feels good to let it out. Especially after...after earlier.

You finally manage to stop sobbing after a couple of minutes, and when you lift your face from Haruka's chest, you realize that you've pretty much ruined her pristine white gown by soaking through its front with your tears. You murmur an apology for this, an apology that Haruka dismisses with a smile and a brief shake of her head. With handkerchief in hand, she dabs at your eyes, drying them, before flipping the scrap of embroidered cloth over and holding it to your nose. You obediently blow as she says so, the act reminiscent of a child being tended to by a parent, or a younger sibling being comforted by an older sister.

"That...that was the first time I've ever seen Yuma-san cry." Haruka says after you've managed to settle down and recover your helmet from where you've thrown it. "Is everything alright, Yuma-san? I realize that you're about to head off to a very difficult mission, but something tells me it's not just that, is it...?"

How do you respond?

Yuma did think that "no one can know". I figure she would be afraid of being rejected by Haruka, and would justify hiding it by thinking that WN will just kill her anyway so no need to tell.

I would expect Haruka would probably not care. I mean she thinks Girl A/Chiaki is going to kill her due to her vision, while Yuma loves her.

Then again, theres a difference between say killing Chiaki, and raping her. And it might make her worry. I mean Yuma has proven she is willing to do it. So probably could not help but wonder if Yuma would be willing to do something similar to her (erase a memory of a fight for example).

I mean, how it was described in the last Trhead sounded like a pretty painful process.

And a completly useless process at that. I still dont get why people voted for that. Why would you expect to see anything other than her short-term memory if Yuma already explained us that this is how it works when we first met Haruka

You want Haruka to be out of the Officio, the one place that she's safe, because if she ever leaves a Silent Room for too long the nightmares that Pinky sends her will drive her mad, assuming that Pinky won't just kill her.
And while being near a Culexus might keep Pinky away, that was mostly Malal, and Omegon is not on her level.

Yeah, I remember that. I am curious however, so lets ask the question in another way.

Lets say Yuma does NOT confess or seek forgiveness/redemption herself, but Chiaki learns of the rape anyway.
For example, lets say Pinky or Homusquad restores the memories to Chiaki.

A question for those those who thought Chiaki would punch and then forgive, would your opinion change, if Yuma kept hiding the truth and Chiaki learned it another way?

Would Chiaki still punch and forgive, or do you think she would act more harshly?

The voters are.

Even if dabbling in Girl As mind might have caused side-effects like Chiakis/Murderfaces memory resetting because of reasons.

She is our last Culexus apart from that Culexus are fucked by default. Add to this that she may probably blame herself for getting Malal and the rest of her squad killed by not checking up on Kharn and lying to Malal.

Its hard for me to not sympathize with her through all she went through all the additional shit she went through due to retarded votes.
Unfortunately we have no means to punish stupid people reading this quest and making stupid votes instead.

You tell her. You tell her everything. What you did to Girl A, what you saw, and what you had to do in order for Malal not to find out. It's less of a recounting and more of a hurried, desperate confession - one that Haruka had to ask you to stop, slow down, and tell her again, as you started crying again as soon as you got to Girl A pleading for you to stop.

When you finally finish, having choked the last few words out in a rush - bowing your head, unable to look at Haruka, dreading to see what kind of face she would be looking at you now that you've laid your guilty, pathetic, weak soul to her - you let out another sob as she pulls your helmeted head down to her chest again, hugging you closer this time, tighter this time. Hushing you, her words soothing and calming as you breathe in her unperfumed, soapy scent.

"No more crying, Yuma-san. You shouldn't be crying." She pats your back comfortingly, before running her fingers through the ruggedized plates of your hardsuit. "You did nothing wrong. I'm certain of it."

You blink through your tears, drawing back and looking up at her - the smile on her face saintly, almost motherly. "I...b-but, Girl A--"

"You needed to know, Yuma-san." Haruka gently interrupts you, one dainty-fingered hand reaching up to wipe your eyes dry once more. "You did it out of necessity, not out of malevolence or amusement. And you did try to ask her gently, yes?" You nod here. "That alone absolves you, just as your intent did. From what you told me, she kept the truth you were looking for behind a promise made to Miss Malal, right?"

Y-yeah. She talked about a pinky promise, or something...

"Miss Malal must have made that promise to prevent other people from knowing. If she herself explained the details to you, then what would have been the purpose of that promise, as far as you're concerned? You were meant to know, too, but you simply wanted to verify it."

I would have Chiaki ask how is she expexting us to trust her. Was Malal wrong in placing her trust on Yuma? If not then how is Yuma going to prove that Malal's trust was not misplaced?

She did not only goof us over, but Malal too, and that point might hit harder than just what she did to us.

Yeah. If Yuma is the one who confesses and begs forgivenes, then she comes off a lot better. It gives the impression that she truly regrets what happened and is tormented by it. Chiaki would realise Yuma could have kept it secret, but chose not to. Makes it a lot easier to forgive.

However if Yuma keeps hiding it, then she comes off as a criminal who does his best to avoid responsibility for her actions. Any apology after she is caught by other means, would feel forced and cheap, and give the impression that she is apologizing not because she is sorry, but because she got caught and is giving a fake apology to try and reduce the punishment.

Thats a lot worse in my view. I doubt Chiaki would kill her either way (last culexus), but I could certainly see her being a lot more harsh in the latter case.

"Miss Malal must have made that promise to prevent other people from knowing. If she herself explained the details to you, then what would have been the purpose of that promise, as far as you're concerned? You were meant to know, too, but you simply wanted to verify it."

You shake your head, here. But you should've simply just trusted what Malal said--

"Yuma-san." Haruka interrupts you again, her hands now lifting your gloved ones up and holding them to her chest. "Please, listen to me. With all the time we've spent together, you've always talked at length about how Malal is training you to be her replacement. Singling you out among your fellow Culexus, giving you exposure to duties and methods that she alone performs.

Now, if she was indeed training you to be her prodigy, then do you think she would prefer someone who simply takes information given to her at face value, or someone who takes the time to verify it? Knowing that in our line of work, a single misstep with received and transmitted information could potentially cost lives?"

The former Seer of the Third nods. "Yes, well, that is your only sin, Yuma-san. It hurt. You hurt Girl A. But she's still alive, isn't she? In contrast to the girls that have lost their lives before, and now simply exist in our memories? She still lives, she still breathes, she can heal from this instead of the cold, dark nothingness that our sisters are now buried in."

...

Haruka smiles at your silence. "...Sometimes, I often forget how young you are, Yuma-san. You've told me little about you, but you've always felt so old to me. Like you've had to do some growing up very quickly."

Really? You...well, you just never really told anyone. You didn't think anyone deserved to have that dumped on their shoulders--

"A burden shared is a burden halved, Yuma-san." The seer tuts here, tapping your helmet gently in a chiding way. "Regardless, you must remember, Yuma-san. As Magical Girls...none of us are saints, none of us have hands clean of blood. This is the life we chose, the life we lead - and the only guarantee we can count on is that none of us will ever see heaven."

It's here that Haruka hugs you again. "Purge yourself of your guilt. You did what you had to, your hand was forced, and Girl A will recover." There's a hard edge to her words as she says the name, but before you could point it out, she draws back to place a kiss on your forehead. "But if you can never forgive yourself, then..." ShI will forgive you as many times as necessary."

How do you react?

You realise that in published novels, the actions of the characters are all chosen by the author. They are puppets, except there is only 1 voter (the author).

The only difference here, is that there are multiple people holding the strings, while in published works, there is only one person holding the strings.

In both cases, the actions of the character are chosen by an external agent or agents. All fictional characters are puppets. Yuma is not actually real. Girl A/Chiaki is not real. No one was raped, since no one exists.

That does not mean however that we cannot immerse ourself in the story and _pretend_ that the characters are real (which is basically what getting immersed in any fiction/game/movie means).

If you cannot do that and see her as just an unreal puppet of the voters, then I guess thats fine. I cannot help but feel that this would really reduce enjoyment of the quest though. Enough said.

But this is a huge difference, anon.
In one you follow just a story, in the other you get to decide and are part of a story.

Thus immersing on a vote you didnt decide on is and should be pretty difficult. Since, you know, it actually breaks the aforementioned immersion of the story you claim you immersed yourself in.

Though afterwards, she has never suggested that Yuma come clean. Then again, she probably thinks that Girl A/Murderface/Chiaki would kill Yuma on the spot, so selfish desire to make sure Yuma remains alive to visit her is still there.

I guess this does not really tell as much about her as I thought. Meh.

Umm, what I meant was that the writers options are options that he thinks the character could take.

So if we choose an option given by the writer, we are not acting OOC (atleast as far as Deculture is concerned).

Since the rape option was not a write-in, Deculture did think that mindrape was plausible for Yuma to do. You can ofcourse argue that Deculture was wrong.

I admit that its a bit odd that the option was there after Yuma called Malal on Girl A being mindwiped, and then did something even worse. But its not like hypocrisy is unknown.

But saying something done by a character is 'out of character' isn't effective, because if they do it, then it really is in character, whether or not people like it. And people do things out of the own character on occasion (c.f. the botched interrogation). Chiaki learned from the experience, her mistake, and coped - and did much better, later.

Though in truth I am more worried about Kharn at this juncture. Kharn is close to witching out and Yuma was supposed to check to make sure she had not gotten worse. However because the mindrape took several hours, there was no time.

And when Malal asked, we lied and said Kharn had not gotten worse, even though she might have for all we know.

You let out a long, shuddering sigh, closing your eyes as Haruka's calming, soothing words sink in. It's...you still know what you did, of course. You doubt you'll ever forget the sight of Girl A looking up at you, pleading for you to stop.

But at the same time, hearing Haruka say what you needed to hear - it feels like a heavy burden has been lifted off you, the cold fingers strangling your heart inside your chest loosening. Allowing you to breathe once more.

"Feel better?" Haruka smiles at you as you draw back, and you nod. Yes. You feel much, much better. Better enough that you can actually return the smile she's giving you with one of your own.

"There. No more crying, alright?" She reaches forward with a hand and brushes a few strands of hair from your eyes. "Remember that there will always be times when what we need to do that may not seem right at first, but I believe the intention behind them matters more. The spirit behind the deed. And sometimes, that is enough to justify even the worst sin you can commit." Haruka pauses her, as if to catch herself from saying something else - before nodding again. "This is one of those times, I feel."

Y-yeah. You...you can see where's she's coming from, definitely. You murmur your thanks again, the second time since you barged into her Silent Room. And for the second time, she dismisses your gratitude with a shake of her head.

"We're friends, Yuma-san. I know that I've been a burden to this Officio more than I've been a boon. I'm not blind or deaf to my detractors here in the Ninth, how even your Warmaster - may the Blessed Lady take her in her healing embrace - is debating about executing me for my own betrayal. But you alone have extended the forgiving hand of friendship to me, and kept me company when I desperately needed it."

She reaches up to brush a lock of hair back, tucking it behind her ear. "If I can at the very least do the same for a friend, to offer that same balm for the wounds that hurt us the most - then who am I to deny it to you?" Another smile. "I can do this much at least, Yuma-san, even at this useless state. And if it's you, then all the better."

You can't help but blush at that, and you resist slamming your visor down to hide your embarrassment. Instead, you simply nod, thanking your stars that you have someone like Haruka supporting you in this, at least.

It's also here that you realize that she...she kissed you. The first time she'd done that. It was to your forehead, sure, but...it was still a kiss. Your very first.

You find yourself swallowing, your cheeks burning redder. Haruka notices this immediately and blinks - before giggling again, her own cheeks burning crimson.

"I...um, I apologize if I took such a liberty to do so. I-I...I fear I've forgotten that Culexus are quite sensitive to such things." She shakes her head, completely contrite. "I...I may have gotten carried away. I just couldn't bear to see you under such duress..."

You shake your own head here. N-no, it's fine. There's no need for her to apologize. ...You liked it, after all. A-and it's kind of like a good luck charm, for later!

"A-ah, yes! A good luck charm!" Haruka's distressed expression gives way to a relieved smile. "Yes, of course I meant to grant you that, too. Because Yuma-san needs to return and enjoy the new batch of tea leaves I've managed to procure."

Oh? New tea leaves...?

"Yes! Miss Tomoe Mami was kind enough to heed my request, despite...well, despite our rather uneasy first meeting." Haruka's smile turns brittle, but only for a moment. "When you get back, Yuma-san, I will do my best to brew a fine pot of it for us to enjoy."

You'll look forward to it, then.

If you drug someone and rape her when she is unconscious, and are carefull to use a condom etc so she does not get std/pregnant, is it still rape?

I mean the woman won't remember it (unconscious), and "seemingly no harm was done".

I think she is indeed trying to atone for Malal, but I do think she also should atone for Chiaki. And I figure Chiaki/Murderface would have mentioned it to atleast Kyoko (who is her best friend).

Suddenly, a beeping alerts you to the time limit you've chosen to wilfully ignore for the moment. approximately 15 minutes has passed since you got here - giving you an hour and change left before Walpurgisnacht comes in and wrecks everything.

"You need to go, yes?" Haruka nods at your gesture. "Don't worry about me, Yuma-san. Leave when you need to. I'll stay here and wait for your return."

You thank her again and make to leave - but before that, you ask the seer one last question. As much as you'd like to ignore it too, you couldn't help but notice the fact that she couldn't say Girl A's moniker without that hard edge in her voice.

Is she still angry about what Girl A did? To her and her Officio...?

"All sins are eventually forgiven, Yuma-san. But the sinner must be worthy of forgiveness first." She shrugs. "I may forgive her myself, but...not for a while. Not yet."

So...that's a yes, then. She's still angry.

The seer's careful facade breaks down into a giggle. "Yes, yes, if you need to know. Oh, you're impossible sometimes, Yuma-san." She nods at you. "Go with the Blessed Lady's grace. Keep her in your thoughts, and you will be safe. I'll pray for you and Miss Malal in the meantime."

It's here that you finally leave Haruka's Silent Room, breaking into a run again. Not caring if you're making a complete racket as you stomp your way through corridors and floors - not like there's anyone else left to bother, really.

Ten minutes of running full-out, and you find yourself stumbling through the General Assembly Hall doors, breathing hard, panting into your vox.

"Omegon!" Malal's shout is a rough, waspish bark from the far side of the hall, evidently pissed. "Where the hell have you been? You're thirty minutes late!"

Well, the thing you have to remember is... Murderface is a bitch. And one who, even when not under the effect of amnesia, spent a lot of time out of her right mind.

The fact that she apparently walked out of Walpurgisnacht unharmed, like some kind of Karma Houdini, just like Kharn, when all of her friends died might very well be why she's so vindictive.

As much as you'd like to reply, you're still trying to catch your breath, your gloved hands on your knees. When you finally do, you straighten up and see that your clearly-irate Rank Leader is with some unfamiliar characters - two other Magical Girls, one of them with short black hair and a vaguely familiar face, the other a shorter one with a spiky black crown on top of her long, unruly blonde hair.

"We've been standing here like idiots waiting for you. Come on, I know this isn't quite Christmas, but I was expecting you of all people to be at least punctual, Omegon." Malal growls from her vox-speaker as you come closer.

Both the newcomers beside her having the decency to at least stay out of this, keeping themselves quiet. The blonde one doesn't seem to be able to stop smiling, though, like grinning at some private joke.

How do you respond?

[]I recognize my failing and will be sure to correct it, Miss Malal. My apologies.
[]Just wanted to settle a few things before I die, that's all.

It feels a bit self-serving, but this is all publicly viewable information so I'll come clear with it...

To answer your questions and summarize: Haruka was part of a group of Thirds that were absorbed into the Officio but turned traitor and tried to kill Murderface. Haruka was talked into helping because she felt that her friends might have a greater chance of success if she was there with them. Murderface killed them all, however, and Haruka was captured.

The rest was explained in quest, that Haruka's mind was broken and Malal pieced her back together after recognizing her as the little sister of the First Warmaster. She was not outright executed because Malal recruited her into hunting down the rest of the 3rd traitors, which Murderface and Kharn killed.

Or one of them is screwing everyone.

Kamijou survived that encounter! Chiaki will probably encounter him soon enough, the guy may be a social reject but he can pretend to be a charmer if his life depended on it!

>>31847148

This is correct! The Ninth is actually one of the more powerful Officios around, even with just one Culexus. Malal has made sure that it has at least one contact in every Officio. (Mami, of course, has TONS of contacts in every Officio, including the Warmaster of the First.)

>>31847156

Hahaha, well...we'll see! But using each golden weapon and getting acquainted with the spirits inside lessens the corruption they can output.

>>31847158

Hmm, well, there are definitely some Warmasters who simply cracked under the pressure and went to the other side, if that's what you mean! Rank Leaders too. But the Officios are usually good enough to clean house on their own.

The 3rd Incubator is still around, and he's washed his paws of the whole Magical Girl business.
Maybe he went into a different market; weapons development and sales, perhaps. And he has intimate knowledge of Incubator technology, giving him a very solid position in offering weapons to governments that no other supplier can offer.

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 05/05/14(Mon)08:38:42 No.31931297

"I recognize my failing and will be sure to correct it, Miss Malal. My apologies." You hear yourself say in a careful monotone, allowing the vox-speakers of your helmet to modulate it to something almost lifeless, machinelike, a complete mirror to the Culexus Rank Leader's own voice. Both newcomers blink at this, with the long-haired blonde one giggling behind a black-clawed hand - and you wince as Malal's own gloved hand smacks loudly and painfully against the back of your helmet, the force behind it enough to scramble your retinal display.

"You're being smart. We talked about you being smart." Malal growls, although you can sense she's amused behind her glowering skulled faceplate. "What did we say about your being smart?"

"...That there's a time and place for everything?" You reply after a moment, before automatically flinching and raising one arm rising up to ward off the second blow. It never comes, almost disappointingly, with Malal only shaking her head, the tell-tale gargling sound crackling from her helmet's speakers.

She turns to the newcomers and shrugs, as if to say 'see the bullshit I have to deal with? - netting a sympathetic nod from the black-haired knight and another giggle from the blonde one. "Youths." Is all that she says, and the pair reacts again, much like a young couple commiserating with a bereaved parent.

Normally, you'd have probably minded about being chided like that in front of guests - even more when they were part of another Officio, especially one as distinguished (or so you've heard) of the Second - but your visit to Haruka earlier, it...really lightened you some. It didn't wipe away all the dread, sure, nor completely unclench your guts from the worried mess they've twisted up into - but Haruka's words had enough of a balm that you could at least tolerate how Malal treated you like the patsy in a third-rate comedy duo.

"Well, let's get the pleasantries quickly and out of the way because we're running late. Ladies, this is Omegon, but you can call her Yuma, since I personally think that's cuter. She's the one we talked about, and who you'll be doing your best to protect. When the shit hits the fan, so to speak, look to her and she'll get you out of the fecal mist even before you can breathe it in."

Did...did Malal just give your real name to these...foreigners? Add to that, they were talking about YOU? And what the fuck is this about you getting them out of...of whatever Malal was talking about?!

Before you can ask, though, it's here that Malal turns to you, now gesturing at the two before you. "Omegon, pay attention. These are two very important people of the Second. The first here with the black hair and the robot arm that looks right out of a super robot anime is Karasawa Enyo, Marshal of the Black Templars."

The one called Enyo nods sharply again, her lips pressed in a thin, formal line. You return the nod with the same silence - at least this one didn't want to engage in banter. You have a feeling the other one might, though--

"And this one, with the claws eerily reminiscent of our Warmaster's and long blonde hair you can probably mop an entire hall with, with how it looks like it hasn't been washed for a while--" The blonde pouts at this, but giggles again. "--is High Marshal Raleigh Alondight of the Black Templars. Don't be afraid if she giggles a whole lot, she's just trying to be unsettling so that you don't notice how short she is. Doesn't really work, of course." This time, Malal chuckles. "Oh, and whatever you do, don't mention about how she has wheels for feet."

You blink at this, and then look down, following where Malal's pointing.

...She does have wheels for feet. Two big ones, rimmed with bronze and anchored where her ankles should be. It's like those kids' shoes with single wheels on the underside, but instead of a shoe you wear you replace your foot with just the wheel and just that.

That's...well. You've never seen that before, but then again, foreigners.

How do you react?

[]...Miss Malal, are you keeping mission parameters from me again? What's this about me suddenly being important all of a sudden? And why are the Second involved?
[]Ask Alondight about her wheels.

...Okay. So apparently Malal's keeping important-sounding mission parameters from you again, if all you had to go on was that that talk about you saving these two from the fan-shit-hitting. You'll definitely have ask her about that in a little bit.

But...seriously, this foreigner's got WHEELS for feet. It's like she doesn't even care about doing normal things with her feet anymore. This goes beyond the sheer, absolute lunacy of Kharn's blade-legs - yes, they're sharp, knifey shit, but at least she can walk with them, and use them as weapons in a pinch. But wheels? What possible tactical advantage can they offer?

"You've got wheels for feet," You finally say, pointing at them. "Why? Just...why."

"Omegon," Malal's bark has a note of warning in it, as you continue to stare at the impossible, stupid wheel-feeties. "What the hell did I just tell you?" An exaggerated sigh wheezes from her speakers. "Seriously, it's as if she doesn't even listen to me, you know? In one ear, out the other. I think it's all the video games and anime--"

"Miss Malal, don't even start." You can't help but be smart now, and you finally manage to dodge a helmet-slap that would've rocked you back on your heels. "You pointed them out! I didn't even notice them until you did! Seriously, what did you expect?!"

"It's fine, it's fine. No need to discipline the young lady, Miss Malal." Raleigh Alondight says after a moment, still smiling. "I get the question a lot, and I"m always happy to answer." It's here that she wheels forward, placing one clawed hand on your shoulder. ...Christ, even with your suit's temperature control and insulation, you can feel how cold her metal fingers are. "Miss Yuma, are you familiar with our credo as the Black Templars? About how we strive to emulate the First Knight in our deeds, thoughts and battle craft?"

...Barely, yes. You remember reading something about that. Some material that Malal asked you to read, dry and boring stuff. The First Knight, a key figure in the Blessed Lady's Mythology, was a warrior without peer, with her brilliant white sword smiting evil wherever she found them. She was justice given form, heavenly wrath honed to a killing edge. That was the extent of what you could recount about her.

As limited as your knowledge is about the First Knight, you're pretty sure she never advocated cutting off your feet and replacing them with wheels.

"Ah, but see, Justice, as it is, needs to be swift. It needs to get from point A to point B in a relatively short period of time, or else there won't be anyone left to dispense justice to, seeing as they've all buggered off." Raleigh squeezes your shoulder. "It's the First Knight's imperative, then, that the Black Templars must always be able to quick, to be peerless in speed and alacrity--"

Malal grunts here, before tapping an imaginary watch on her wrist with a finger.

"...Yes, yes, fine. I know we're pressed for time, but that's no reason to hurry me up." Raleigh frowns, before turning back to you, suddenly all seriousness. "As I was saying, it's the First Knight's imperative that we go fast, Miss Yuma."

Ah. So...that's what they're for, then? So that she can...go fast?

"That's the long and short of it, yes."

Right.

Why are all foreigners so fucking WEIRD?

"Right, trivia time's over, we need to get to where we're going." Malal claps both her gloved hands. "Alondight, Karasawa, get the rest of your Knights in here so we can get to the teleportation platform right away. I just need to talk to Yuma here in private vox frequency for a second, because she picked the option to be a watch-wearing dildo just now."

"Understood, Miss Malal." Both Raleigh and Enyo bang their mailed fists into their breastplates in salute - and you run after Malal as she walks towards the skull throne that Kharn had had constructed specifically for her, made out of real skulls, and demanded it be placed at the business end of the General Assembly Hall. Kyuubey, of course, was quick to acquiesce, although you suspect it was really more of Malal's doing than the Incubator actually allowing himself to be pushed around.

"They're involved because I called in a few favors," Malal grunts into the private vox channel she'd just opened (and brute-forced you to join a moment later, the notification popping up in your retinal display like some sort of screamer).

She plops herself right down on the pitifully-worn cushion of the skull throne itself - and you could almost feel the sympathetic pain of having to sit in such an uncomfortable chair. A cool chair, but a very uncomfortable one nonetheless. "Let's be realistic here - none of us are going to last long around Walpurgisnacht without their kind of protection. They'll be tanking hits for us until we can do what we're supposed to."

...That makes sense, sure, but why the Second specifically? Isn't there another Officio that could be better at this than them?

"No, they're the best at this." Malal shakes her head. "Black Templars are pretty much trained to be really tough no matter the environment, with group tactics specifically designed to charge en-masse through enemy ranks to get to the main objective. Their armor helps too." She shrugs. "I'd argue the Sixth is a better choice, but they're more hunters than anything else. And we need a shield, not a bunch of howling lunatics that you can distract with a bag of catnip."

Right. You'll...accept that for now.

"For now, she says." The Culexus chuckles. "Anyway, as for your other burning question - it's really nothing important. I just want them to make sure that they'll sacrifice everything they have to protect you. Not that I doubt them or anything, but out of everyone in our rank, I'd like for you to be able to get home in one piece." She reaches out and pokes your visor with a glove-encased finger. "After this, it's only going to get worse for the Ninth, and they'll need a Culexus more than ever. Especially a Prognosticator that they can rely on."

...What? She's...Malal's actually trying to manipulate things so that you'll be the only one left alive? She's doing that for YOU?

Boy, it...it really makes you feel glad that you didn't think of her as a traitor earlier, right? And all that stuff you did earlier?

Ugh. You can feel your guts clenching up again, despite Haruka's benediction earlier. It's just...ergh.

"Well, don't get all choked up about it," Malal snaps mildly at your silence. "That's no guarantee you'll be walking out of there, even. But I'm trying to rig it so that you've got the highest odds to do so." She shrugs again. "Just try not to tell anyone else in the rank. I think morale's at an all-time low as it is."

How do you react?

You try to swallow back the panic rising in your chest, surging up your throat. Why...why you, of all people? Of all the Culexus? Besides your being the latest recruit, there's...there's not much justification for you to be the one she's betting all the chips on. You can name three, maybe five Culexus that have much more potential than you, you can name ten out of the remaining twenty that are way better at being a Culexus than you ever could - and pretty much all of them are more experienced than you are. So why you? Why not the others? Why not Cavefish?

Why not Malal?

"It's...not in the cards," Malal replies, the brief pause in her words as pregnant with hesitation as it could ever be. "It's not part of the plan. Plan won't work if things aren't done right and proper. And I can't just hand it off to someone else, you know. They might get it wrong."

...Plan? What plan? Is...is she planning something?

Jesus, is that what it is? Is Malal planning to orchestrate her own death, like...like some sort of grand suicide in front of everyone else? Because you'll tell her now, up front, how much bullshit that is. She's not even the type to make a martyr of herself--

"And I don't recall you being this fucking objectionable." Malal growls, surging to her feet suddenly. "Do you think I WANT to die? Do you think I want to see my entire rank die out there, fighting a world-ending monster for a world who won't even know what their names are, much less what they look like?"

"I don't," Your rank leader continues, crossing her arms over her chestplate, speaking in a much calmer voice now. "No one in their right mind would want any of those things. But we have to. I have to. Because it's what we're supposed to do. It's what the plan's asking for - the plan that'll save this world and everything in it with the maximum chance of success. A plan I've been working on for..." She looks up towards the ceiling, counting off with her fingers. "...What, like more than a decade now? Something like that." Malal shrugs again.

"But yeah. If I can rig it just enough without deviating from the plan too much, we can still get that success rate AND have enough left over to save one." She pokes you on your visor again. "And the plan allows for you, Omegon. Deal with it however you wish, but I don't want to hear another objection about it from you. Alright?"

Gritting your teeth, you force yourself to nod. It's...you still think this is bullshit. You still think Malal is being fuckheaded crazy about all this. The fatalistic tone in her voice - it makes her sound so resigned. So weak.

Not unlike you, earlier, when you were so desperate to hear from Haruka that you did nothing wrong.

"Good," Malal sighs, relieved. "It's not just Walpurgisnacht the plan takes care of, you know? A lot more things beyond it. Hell of a lot more things, and they all hinge on how this turns out." She turns towards the skull throne she'd just stood up from. "...A promise is a promise, anyway."

It's then that the hall, all but empty a few moments ago, is suddenly filled with heavy bootsteps, clanking armor-plates, and purring servos. You turn to glance along with Malal, and see the rest of the Black Templars filing in. ...More than twenty of them, it looks like. Probably thirty. Each one with a distinct variation of their black armor, draped with bone-white tabards with their heraldic cross.

Each one looking calm, composed, and ready to die.

In the shattered quiet of the hall, Enyo barks out a single word - and the group of Black Templars immediately halt in their tracks with a single collective step, forming two perfect lines. The Marshal then turns on her heel to bang her fist against her chestplate again - and Alondight nods at Malal, who then waves back.

"Right, we're about to set off. If Cavefish ran Protocol 8 just like I taught her to, our guys should already be at the teleportation facility." Malal looks at you. "...Anything you'd like to get off your back before we do, Yuma? There's no going back after this, you know."

Survivor's guilt, it's a he'll of a thing. Is Yuma gonna blame chiaki later for taking up all her time? If Yuma had gone to Kharn and handled the other stuff like Malal ordered her to instead, I wonder if that would have a significant effect on the outcome of events.

It is a moot point now, because there is no going back. It is interesting to think about though. I wonder if we will see a change in Omegon. Or perhaps during an interaction with her, chiaki might accidentally on purpose hit a nerve.

Omegon, I need you to go into my mind to help me remember a name of someone. Why is your helmet sweating?

You take a deep breath, smelling the faint antiseptic smell of your suit's deodorizing rebreather. It's...she's right. After this, there's no going back. You need to tell her, at the very least. Tell her the truth - and Haruka already did tell you that you did nothing wrong. Malal...you're confident she would see things in a similar light. They've matched perceptions before, at least.

"I never...I never checked up on Kharn, Miss Malal." You finally bring yourself to say, and you're surprised to hear your voice sounding so calm. Besides that brief moment of hesitation, it's almost like you're greeting your Rank Leader hi, instead of admitting that you lied to her face only moments ago. "I didn't have time to. I should've checked up on her, but I couldn't. I'm sorry."

Malal is deathly silent here, her helmet slowly turning to face you completely - the skull painted upon her visor seemingly not just staring, but glaring. Her gloved hands, earlier relaxed and loose, are know clenching into fists - unclenching a moment later, and then clenching again. "

And apropos of - well, what's happening right now - your retinal display suddenly locks onto Malal, labeling her as a Threat, Threat, Threat. You blink the warning away quickly, as you wait for the Culexus to react.

"...That's fine." She finally replies, her voice just as tight, as tense as the fists she's making with her hands. "I can't say I'm not disappointed - I did send you down there for a reason - but it's fine. Understandable. Easily fixed." She breathes in, slowly, deliberately enough that you hear her intake of breath over her vox - and she lets this out in a shuddering sigh. A moment later, she turns towards you once more.

"If you still want to be useful instead of the lying piece of shit you've proven yourself to be, Chitose Yuma, you'll go and lead the Black Templars to the teleporation facility. You DO remember where that is, right?"

You nod here, unable to speak. Unable to even breathe. It's...Malal's never been this angry at you before. Never this venomous. Never this terrifyingly hateful. "Y-yes, I d-"

"REALLY?" Malal's sudden shout is loud enough to short her vox speakers out - and for a moment, you hear her unfiltered voice, broadcasted out to everyone in the hall, crackling with static. "IS THAT THE TRUTH, OR IS THAT ANOTHER FUCKING LIE, YUMA?"

N-no, you manage to stammer out, shaking your head furiously at the face of Malal's wrath. No, of course not. You're...you're not lying now. You know where it is. You'll lead the Black Templars. You just - earlier, you didn't think--

"OH! So THAT explains it!" Malal growls. "You DIDN'T THINK! You weren't THINKING AT ALL!" You step back as the Culexus moves toward you, her shoulders bunched. "Did you fucking think I give you orders just for the FUN of it, Yuma? Do you think I do it for my HEALTH?"

N-no--

"THEN WHY DIDN'T YOU DO IT LIKE I FUCKING ORDERED YOU TO?!"

Please--

"Excuse me, hello," A different voice carefully ventures out from behind you, and both you and Malal turn to look at Alondight wheeling forward, a careful smile on her face. "Is anything the matter? Forgive me if I'm interrupting anything, but I was under the impression that we were..." she taps her fleshmetal wrist with a claw, in a mirror of Malal earlier. "...pressed for time, as it is? Surely this can be settled later." Alondight smiles at you, and you're struck with the realization that she's not just hurrying this up, but she's actually rescuing you.

"...Sorry, Alondight." Malal replies after a while, her vox-filter switching on again. "There's been a change of plans. Yuma here will be leading you to the teleportation facility. I need to attend to something very important for a minute or so." It's here that she nods at the High Marshal. "Don't worry, I'll do my best to catch up before it's go time. I wouldn't miss it for the world."

First anons backed Yuma mind sexually assaulting a weakened and fragile girl a, and then demonize her for it.

Now, they're all clamoring for her to come completely clean in front of her Rank leader who's already thinking infinitesimally low of her right now and, just admitted she quite frankly terrified of the fact she knows she's dying today and she can't stop it. Which will make Malal think even worse of the one girl she's banking on surviving this.

Even though I was against telling Malal the truth, I'm actually okay with the outcome. Yuma's pretty much frazzled and losing her mind over everything, which is perfectly acceptable considering the situation, and Malal is actually losing control of a situation for once (I do like chessmaster characters and I like Malal personally, but it does get old when everybody seems to think she can foresee each and every single action, no matter how insignificant).

What I don't exactly like is the feeling that most of the people voting this way is doing it to either stick it to Malal or stick it to Yuma.

Things are going out of control, chaos is building as the barrier between reality ans the warped realm witches reside in thins before the arrival of the modern apocalypse.

Malal is learning she can't carry the world on her shoulders of, but she tries to because no one else can either.

A character that the players barely knew, but that Midori was very familiar with, and who Midori obviously cared about as her only friend.
Not only that, but Mirai had been talking with Malal and Godoka for much longer than Midori, seemed to have been let in on the plan, and by losing her we lost a prime source of information on both Godoka and Malal's plan.

You try to stop in your tracks, to halt your progress - but Alondight's grip on your wrist is too strong, and even with your friction boots, you can't get enough traction to counter the High Marshal's wheel-assisted pull.

No, no. You can't leave like this. You can't let it end like this. You have to tell her everything. She'll understand, even if she's mad. That's the important thing. You did nothing wrong! You need to tell her everything so that she'll understand and be okay with things when she gets back with the group later!

"Stop fidgeting and fighting, please," Alondight hisses at you. "Don't you see? Your Miss Malal is already clearly irate, way past the point of understanding. It can wait until after the battle, young lady! Whatever it is, it can't be as important as the task we're about to carry out!"

No! No, you have to tell her! It's important that you do! Malal will understand, she's always been the cool-headed and understanding one, and--

"WHY did you think I pulled you away from there?!" The High Marshal's wheels skid to a halt. "I overstepped Officio rules and traditions by butting right in between what is obviously a disciplinary action! Do you know why?" She gestures towards Malal, the Culexus already making to leave. "I felt her killing intent all the way over here! Do you understand that, Yuma? She was angry enough to kill you."

...No. No way. Malal wouldn't.

You shake your head, taking advantage of Alondight's distraction, running back towards Malal. To tell her everything, not just over the vox but by your own lips. She'd appreciate that, at least she'd know you were serious about being sorry--

The screech of accelerating wheels behind you cuts you off. Agh, fucking foreigners and their stupid wheels, she's going to try dragging you away again!

"Yuma. Don't. Be. STUPID." Alondight growls, her cold fleshmetal hand wrapping around your wrist again, the points this time digging into the leather, painfully sharp. "Let Miss Malal handle things. We have to--"

"What the fuck is it now?!" Malal also shouts, noticing the commotion. "Fuck's sake, Yuma, I told you to lead them where they're supposed to go! Can't you even handle that--"

No time for a vox-blurt. No time to unhelm and shout it to her.

You compress your memory of what you did to Girl A - that shameful, buried memory - and pulse it right into Malal's quiet, closed-off mind. Using all your strength to punch through the defenses she'd always had up, even around you, even around the Ninth. She grunts in pain here, rocking back on her heels as if she'd been physically struck - before she freezes in place, a gasp rasping from her vox-speakers.

You did nothing wrong, and she should be proud of you for doing what you had to--

"CHITOSE YUMAAAA!"

The entire hall stops at Malal's loud, deafening, vox-amplified scream of rage. Your eyes go wide, your breath catches in your throat, and you realize with a cold, sinking feeling that you've just made the second worst mistake of your life.

You were expecting the punch. As you watched Malal storm down the steps of the throne and march her way down the aisle, fists clenched as she all but stalked towards you - you were expecting her hate and anger to be expressed by something physical.

It was rumored that Malal, before contracting, was something of a hooligan - a yankee that crouched in front of convenience stores and beat up anyone who looked at her funny with her fists. Violence was something innate to her, and you found yourself thinking that as you coughed blood onto the inside of your helmet's faceplate, from having your liver and lungs brutalized with an unforgiving punch through your breastplate.

You also expected the second punch after that. And the third. With Malal screaming your name all the while. Cursing you and hating you in the same breath.

What you didn't expect was her crying. Her sobbing with a rage that could only be described as futile, impotent, despite its fury. Despite the fact that Enyo had to come up behind her, lock her arms underneath the raging Culexus' and pull her away - while the other knights formed a barrier between the both of you.

"YOU FUCKING IDIOT!" Malal roars. "YOU KILLED US! YOU KILLED EVERY SINGLE FUCKING ONE OF US, YOU SELFISH LITTLE PIECE OF SHIT! I TAUGHT YOU TO BE BETTER THAN THAT! I TAUGHT YOU TO BE SMARTER THAN THAT!"

"Please, Malal-san," Enyo says quietly. "Please, this isn't the time."

"WHAT THE FUCK DID SHE DO TO YOU?!" Enyo could've been trying to plead with a wall with the amount of attention Malal gave her. "SHE WASN'T EVEN HERSELF! JESUS CHRIST, YUMA, ALL SHE WANTED WAS TO BE LEFT ALONE AND ASSEMBLE HER FUCKING GUNS! I JUST TOLD YOU TO CHECK UP ON HER, NOT TEAR HER MIND APART!"

You had to know! Y-you had to! You didn't mean to--

"I TRAINED YOU!" Malal's vox-speaker shorts out again, revealing her true voice, and you very nearly sink to your knees as you hear how hoarse - how bleak - it is. "I TRAINED YOU PERSONALLY! YOU KNEW FUCKING WELL WHAT THAT COULD DO TO SOMEONE! AND YOU STILL DID IT ANYWAY!"

It's here that the berserk Culexus finally manages to break free of Enyo, reaching for you - and she would've done so, had not it been for the knights pushing her back. "You killed us. You fucking hear me, Yuma? You killed us. Not just Cavefish and the rest, but them, too. The entire fucking Templars."

"Come, now, Miss Malal..." Alondight rolls forward, interposing herself between the both of you, her smile still there but...shaken now. Uncertain. "Whatever Yuma has done, surely it's not that bad as to condemn all of us to an early grave? We are still here, as well as our resolve. You can't mean to just write us off like that, even if this is a debt being repaid."

"..." Malal glares at Alondight, no mean feat considering her face is hidden by her helmet - before she shrugs Enyo's grip off of her again. "All you had to do was do what I wanted you to, Yuma." She doesn't turn to face you - rather, she seems to be doing all she can NOT to look at you. "You had one job. One. Job. How did you make this worse than I've ever planned for it to be? How did you go from being my most trusted subordinate to a shitnado of bad decisions in...three hours?"

She finally looks at you, and you see her shoulders droop. "Are you that afraid to die? I'm doing my best to make sure that doesn't happen, and this...this is what I have to hope for." Malal shakes her head. "You, and what's...what's left of her."

Silence. Utter, dead, silence.

"Go." Malal lets out a sigh. "Just...go. Go to the Teleportation Facility. We'll proceed as planned. I'll...do my best to see what can be salvaged from here." She looks at Enyo, and then at Alondight. "Sorry for that. It hasn't been a good week. It's..."

"Nothing to apologize for," Alondight says quickly, smiling once more. "The days past hasn't been kind to anyone, not with this giant cackling sword hanging above our heads. Stress is inevitable, but it's how we deal with it that matters." She squeezes your shoulder. "I'll take responsibility for this one. "Yeah." Malal glances at you again, before turning away. Looking the most tired and defeated that you've ever seen her. "Yeah, I hope so."

"Come now, Yuma, we've wasted enough time." Alondight says crisply, dragging you again. "We have a death to earn, and a world to save."

This time, you let her. No longer fighting, no longer protesting. Just...allowing the High Marshal to do what she wished.

Yeah. You still have a world to save.

Even if yours feels like it's already ended.

Four hours before our appointed time of death, it was sweltering, bumfucking hot. That wasn't to say it was hot outside – strictly speaking, Japan was rather nice this time of year – but rather, that we weren't afforded any kind of adequate preparatory facility and had spent the last twelve hours and change in full armor. We were hoping to be afforded the time to shower and stretch when we reached the Officio, but right at that moment, most of us would have settled for some water and a toilet break.

The latest travel travesty (travelsty?) and, in any other situation, grave insult that would surely require blood reparations or somesuch (I'll have to check the handbook if I make it back) was a bus, a normal civilian fucking bus, now loaded with thirty-six women in ebon-black armor and one pasty middle-aged man trying desperately to pretend he understood what was going on. To make matters worse, he had the dubious fortune of having Trinity sitting within glaring distance – she had all the charm of a sock filled with poisonous spiders even on the best of days (with a disposition to match).

Admittedly, that wasn't entirely unintentional. Call it passive-aggressive if you will, it-

Well, it was just passive-aggressive, mostly. Freak the locals out enough and the Ninth won't book half of the glorious salvation of the world on a Lady-cursed civilian bus.

"…Ma'am." Enyo must've noticed the look on my face as I began to wonder how long I'd have to hold one of my wheels against the floor to saw through it. "We're passing the tower." I glanced to her, and she gently tapped the window with her finger.

Oh please. Even if she had told Yuma everything she remembered (which wasn't much since, as Malal said, her memories were sealed with a timed-release), the people who want an interesting story would have chose to mindrip her anyway.
They wanted to see a competent, trained apprentice go against everything that her master taught and and become, in her words, a shitnado of bad decisions. Because it's more interesting.

She started to go on about it, but honestly, it went rather over my head. I nodded as she talked, something about a world monument project, and Mitakihara as the pinnacle of humanity's cultural achievements. They'd tried to replicate a lot of the world's most recognizable landmarks, but…even when I tried to appreciate it, something just seemed wrong.

Maybe it was the air, or stale candy from the flight, but the sour taste in my mouth seemed to overwhelm everything else, even the glittering parade of landmarks that we'd passed by. It was probably the dying bit, actually, or the look on Enyo's face.

She hadn't been home in years, I dimly realized. She hadn't been home for years, and it was for this. Probably all she could do not to cry.

The look she gave me was priceless, a mix of tired surprise and a pinch of anger, chased away by her usual cool, sulky expression.

"I have already thought about it, and I have no intention to. …Noriko isn't a strong girl, High Marshal. She doesn't need to know about any of this, least of all see me when I'm about to die."

"And the…others?" I added quietly, busying myself with what was left of the two bags of rather squished macarons I'd prepared for the trip.

Bugger. This was probably a metaphor for something. A macaron, sat on and crushed, squeezed between ebon-black talons and eaten by a dead woman. A bit chewy and unsatisfying. If I knew what Kafkaesque meant, this would probably be it. I chewed in silence before awkwardly offering the bag toward her. She didn't take any.

"…I would rather be allowed to at least pretend I'm going to die a hero." I winced at that and swallowed.

"I'm getting a bit sick of that 'oh, poor me, I'm going to die' thing. D'y'know, El hissed at me until I promised to bring you back alive. It was almost like she had feelings for a second, there. Scared the piss out of me, sure as anything. Do you think I'm going to go back there and tell her I couldn't save you?" I narrowed my eyes, hardened my stare. No doubt the half-purged remains of a slain dessert pinched between my claws only strengthened the image of deadly seriousness I was projecting.

“No. I think we’re both going to die, Ma’am,” she mumbled coolly, like it was a sodding option.

“Would you call me an oathbreaker, then, Marshal? A liar?”

“Damn right. I expect you, the Princess, and Callahan back, at least. Somebody needs to tame that woman.” It hurt just a bit. El…well, El was complicated. Not something I wanted to think about right then, and certainly not something I wanted to bring up with Enyo in any kind of depth.

“Ma’am. Yes, Ma’am.”

A quiet giggle, barely audible over the sound of the bus under us (and the gentle whirr as I idly spun my wheels) grabbed Enyo’s attention and mine, and we both sniggered along with it. Callahan was sitting across from us, faceplate raised as she nursed a thermos of lukewarm tea. She looked like hell warmed over – ashen-gray skin with faded, mint-colored hair flowing from the back of her helmet - which by her standards was rather good, actually.

No hint of fear, of course, or remorse. Vivian was older than the rest of us put together, there was really no denying it – she was an old, haggard veteran when I enrolled, she had been an old, haggard veteran when High Marshal Erebus was still with us, and not even the Librarians seemed entirely sure when she’d contracted. She’d seen a thousand witches come and go and more than her fair share of Walpurgisnachts, or so they said.

Met her husband once – nice gent, looked like a dead man walking, same as her. Must have been ninety or so, and he had the most glorious moustache-

Right, no. I’m not going to spend the last few hours of my bloody life thinking about moustaches. Amazing what comes to mind, though, isn’t it?

“Ah, I didn’t mean to interrupt,” she chirped in her quiet, raspy way. “It’s just…I’m happy you can hold your chin up through this, High Marshal. Not many women in our position can.” It was a little hard to buy from someone who had been all smiles for the entire time I had known her, but one doesn't complain. "I couldn't, to be honest. When all I needed to worry about was myself, sure, but never when I had to lead."

"Her stubborn refusal to understand the gravity of a situation was always one of the High Marshal's strong points." Enyo smirked over at me. I kicked her in the ankle with a wheel, letting it spark off her armor with a momentary screech.

Three hours before our appointed time of death, it was unreasonably crowded. The Ninth in all their shortsighted, skinflint glory had made no particular amount of room for the Templars in their Officio, not even for a few short hours, and the lot of us were already tired and restless. Even Enyo was starting to show her irritation, and a small group – O'Connell, Sinclair, Avery, and (of course) Trinity – seemed to be doing their level best to hate the entire country out of existence.

Callahan remarked that when she joined the Templars, they called that sort of attitude 'initiative'. I wish I could say she was joking, of course, but I spent most of my time as a trainee in a bunk with 'MY ARMOR IS CONTEMPT. MY SWORD IS HATRED' gouged into the ceiling, and after a while, it only bothered me because they skipped a bit of the mantra. I suppose whoever did it just didn't use a shield.

As exasperating as it was to have some of the fine women under me behaving like children, though, the worst was easily the Princess. Which was no particular surprise.

Mordred was fairly new to the Templars – she'd barely seen ten grief seeds, and most of her training was still theoretical. Fresh out of the abbey, just like her sister was the first time we'd met, only ten times worse; Arty was stuck up – IS stuck up – and had a steel rod up her arse twice the size of her sword, but she had the aura of a ruler. She was someone you could respect, even then, someone with a certain noble bearing. Supposedly, every Pendragon was like that in some way or another; Arty carried herself like a hero, Nero's love for the people that followed her was boundless if a bit inscrutable, and Mordred…

…I hadn't quite figured Mordred out yet.

She was violent, at least. Had a bit of a sister complex, I think; she was the sort of recruit you'd have trouble with no matter what you did with her, and it was made all the worse by her family's blood and the expectations it set for her. The little brat had been pouting furiously since we'd settled in, and had begun pacing as of a few minutes ago, grumbling about the grave insult to our station and Officio, as if that were any sort of concern right now.

"Princess," Enyo let out a low grumble. "Sit down. Please." Of course, she picked up on it before I said anything – if anyone could tell when I was about to snap, it was Enyo.

"Marshal, surely you don't intend to defend these blaggards? Ordinarily we'd be chomping at the bit to execute-"

"Princess." Sharper, now. …Ah, I knew what was coming next. She turned her gaze to me instead.

"High Marshal," the Princess barked with just the slightest whine in her voice. "Surely you don't endorse submitting to these heretics?"

Vividly, I recalled a scene from my own days as a cadet – Arty had said the same thing to High Marshal Erebus once, just once. Near verbatim, with nearly the same tone. The High Marshal backhanded her so hard that the High Inquisitor received a call from Rome just a few minutes later, with the Empress complaining of a migraine. I still think of it now and again.

I'd never tell Arty, of course, but sometimes that thought gets me through the day.

“High Marshal? You agree with me, don’t you?” She really had no idea. I’ve always caught hell for my, ah, questionable sense of gravitas, but Mordred was really, truly ignorant of the situation. I opened my mouth to snap at her, then thought better of it. It couldn’t be helped.

“I’ve already begun composing my letter of complaint, Pendragon. I shall send it the moment we return home from our certain demise.” I reached up to rub my temple with my knuckles, curling the claws of my gauntlet away from my head. Headaches were not typically a problem for me, but once in a while…

“With all due respect-“

“Ah! Since you’re so keen on the subject, do you have any recommendations as to which perfume we ought to spritz it with? Would you like me to use your signet ring for the wax seal?”

Silence. I admit, my self-control may have lapsed a bit.

“How about we send them a dildo with which to fuck themselves? Sounds like a good time, eh? Eh?” No response, just a silence rapidly building into a cold anger. “No? No to the dildo?”

“Ma’am.” Enyo nudged my side, and I relented with a sigh.

For that matter, neither am I. Now is not the time to put our pride before the mission.”

“Ma’am.” The fury in Mordred’s eyes didn’t relent even a bit.

“Those of us who return home can report, and the King and the High Inquisitor can sort out how to deal with this relations disaster. But this is not the time, Pendragon. This is the literal opposite of the time. For the time being, we’re going to bite the bullet, smile to the Ninth’s Culexus when we meet them, and kill ourselves a giant damned witch.”

Two hours before our appointed time of death, we met with Lady Malal, leaving Callahan in charge in our absence. Left her my card, too, with the quiet recommendation she order pizza, or ice cream, or something to get everyone out of their own heads. Not a luxury Marshal Karasawa and I could afford, nice as it would have been, and she wasn’t too keen on letting me see her sister, either.

Shame, I’d heard she was a looker. But I wasn’t going to press it, not now. Maybe that would be what I’d do if I made it back: sleep with Enyo’s sister. Good a reason to come back as any, right? March off to war, and fight all the harder to return to your girl back home. That you hadn’t met yet.

I worried then that I’d started to crack. …Really, the whole time, I’d been trying to think of everything but Walpurgisnacht. It was what it was: a horrible, grim, cackling reality that was going to claim the lives of fifty-four brave women today, bare minimum. I should have let them stay. I should have forced them to stay. If we were already destined to die, it ought to have been me and Enyo, and that ought to have been enough. And it wasn’t, and it was all I could do not to scream.

…Dame von Seckendorff, please, please protect these brave, stupid girls. I don’t know if I can, and Erebus’s bloody Lady surely won’t. Please let some of them go home alive. Just one would be enough.

“She’s here.” Enyo stiffened up next to me and I followed suit, locking my wheels in a practiced but precarious balance as Lady Malal marched toward us in long, hurried strides.

…Just one. Please.

You...don't understand storytelling, do you? The MC can't always make the best decision, or else that would make for a very boring story; the outcome would always be on the positive. You have to have some negative consequences in there, and the players choosing the bad choices do 2 things.

1). Finally gives us actual consequences
2). Helps explain why Yuma despises Chiaki

And Deculture does it fucking wonderfully.

~~Can't blame me for the votes, my work and sleep schedule don't allow me to join in till right after chikuwa or after the thread has died.~~

Honestly, Malal's been a giant asshole throughout this bit. She doesn't let anyone in on her Genius Master Plan and still expects everyone to go along with it and then blames them for inadvertently ruining it.

>This was written by TwiceBorn!

I was dead, my body just didn't know it yet.

All I could feel was fear. Bowel-clenching, absolute fear that rooted me in place, kept me from moving or begging for mercy or even running away. My frozen mind couldn't comprehend anything else: not the sting of the dozen wounds I wore like a dress; not the trickle of warm piss running down my legs; not the sight of the rest of my squad scattered about like chaff, moaning in pain or bleeding out into the ground.

My killer was a Witch, some poor sparkle who had one too many bad days and decided to take it out on the rest of the world. Maybe she was a cute little blonde with pigtails, maybe she was a tall beauty with long, straight black hair like those princesses from old times; whatever she used be, the creature before me seemed to be made of blurred and faded blocks of color, watery chunks of red and blue and purple piled into a loose humanoid form. Teeth the shape of paint brushes, claws in the image of pencils. There was something to be said for being killed by a bad post-modern painting, but I wasn't sure what it was.

The Witch roared. A symphony of sounds that never should have been heard together, with a pinch of hatred and grief to taste. Its body, already looking like madness made manifest, twisted into some new perverse shape that was the bane of sanity. I tried to muster every last drop of my remaining strength to do something, anything, even if it was raising my weapon or grabbing the nearest squaddie and getting the hell out, but the best I could do was numbly take a step back. Too afraid to fight, too afraid to even cower. As it reached down to tear me apart, all I could think of was my poor squadmates, and how badly I'd failed them as their leader. I should have been smarter, I should have been more decisive, I should have sent them back and tried to hold the Witch off by myself. Shoulda, woulda, coulda.

Then, salvation came soaring in on black-pinioned wings.

I think you may be misunderstanding some of us as well. "It's interesting" isn't even the reason why most people voted for it in the first place, they thought Malal was actually holding out on us and they were shadowrunning enough to want to know what it was.

"It's interesting" is being given more for the end result. I know I didn't vote for the mindrape, but because the result ended up unexpectedly dramatic, I liked it..

Her raven hair was cut short, almost brutally short, coming down only to her chin. Her eyes were a dark violet, behind red-rimmed glasses that did nothing to disguise the grim focus that burned within. Her trim, lithe figure was adorned by a laced skirt uniform, rendered a splotchy black by weeks-old blood and grime that she never bothered to clean. She held a M95 anti-materiel rifle in one hand and a grenade launcher in the other, with a small, scarred shield clasped to her right wrist.

She was Girl A. The Warmaster's favored pet. An addict, a bum, a drunkard, the target of gossip that I admit I didn't abstain from. She was one of the top Vindicares, a vicious killer through and through, and the mask she wore was the visage of murder.

She opened up with a volley of explosives. Brilliant bursts of orange flame, blooming from the Witch's form like flowers. The sight of it made my body ache—an ache, I realized, that came from being sliced up by shrapnel let loose by the detonating grenades. The pain triggered my training and I sprinted to my squadmates, dragging them into cover and away from the crossfire.

Did she come here to save us, or to just kill the Witch? I wasn't sure then, and I'm still not sure now. If she did, it certainly was a classic Murderface rescue: liberal amounts of weapons-fire, collateral damage unheeded, for only the destruction of the target mattered. It might have been just dumb luck that I didn't get hit by a stray bullet or got vaped by a misplaced bomb. But at the time, I didn't care. My life span had been expanded by another handful of seconds, and when I felt my cheeks covered by an unfamiliar wetness, I realized they were the tears of relief.

Once my squadmates were safe, I risked a glance over my shoulder. She was still at it, blasting the Witch with enough firepower to cripple a battalion, flitting from position to position like a bird. A near-miss shredded a piece of her uniform, leaving a piece of it fluttering behind her like a small cape, like the black-feathered wings of a raven. The Witch's barrier rendered the battlefield into a twisting visual nightmare of light-swallowing blackness and insane color, and between that and her time-twisting powers she seemed to jump in and out, in and out of the shadows.

For every swipe of the Witch's claw, she answered with another volley of gunfire. For every swarm of familiars sent forth, she rendered the battlefield unto ash with bombs. At one point, she dashed up the Witch's goddamn arm and pumped three-hundred rounds from an ancient MG42 in its face, then stuck a handful of grenades in its wounds as it reeled from the assault. Orange fire-blossoms bloomed again as she lept off and emptied a handcannon in mid-air. Round after round, shot after shot, munition after munition...the finest modern tools of death hurled at something that shouldn't exist. Each blow pulverizing the blocky form of the Witch. Each blossom of fire eliciting a symphonic roar of pain.

It wasn't long until her work was done. She wasn't even breathing hard, and she seemed more focused on fishing around for her pack of cigarettes as the world bled back into reality. In a couple of moments the rest of the reinforcements arrived—Sayaka Miki, Kyouko Sakura, others. Miki seemed to be yelling something unkind, while Sakura started slapping backs and letting out her signature guffaw. Murderface, for her part, ignored it all. The only thing she seemed to care about was her smoke.

Soon enough, the medics arrived and started tending to our injuries.

I glanced back behind me—for a moment, just a moment—demanding the medic to let me go. When I looked back, though, she was gone, like she was never there.

I never really got to see her again. Nothing too melodramatic: we're both fine, as far as I can tell, it's just that the 9th is a big Officio and we're always busy, and the timing never quite felt right. I got a peek at her when she got officially crowned Warmaster, but I didn't really get the chance to go up to her at the time. Too many other girls crowding around her, you know? And I'm not the best with crowds.

But one day...one day I'll find her again. I'll find her and tell her what she deserved to be told, that day when she delivered me from death.

“There was once a girl in the forest who lived alone—no parents, no husband, no children. She worked hard every day, tilling the little field she'd cleared among the trees, keeping her chickens and her one aging cow. But every afternoon came a raven, with dark, unfriendly eyes and black-pinioned wings that made it blend with the shadows. Every afternoon would come by and peck at her field and bother her chickens and cow, and sit atop a branch and caw and caw as if to mock the girl. So she cursed the raven and threw rocks at it, and wished fervently it would go away.

Then one day a wolf stalked the woods, and found the girl alone in her home. The girl screamed and wept for someone to save her, and begged the Shieldmaiden for aid. And behold! Down from the branches swept the raven, and pecked and scratched at the wolf until it fled, blinded and stung by a dozen wounds. For the raven, in pecking at the girl's fields and bothering the girl's animals, had made itself an unruly but loyal neighbor, and considered the girl as its own.

Anyway, it makes me feel a little off put knowing that Ariman had been able to woo the former warmaster of the Black Templars into being her Essquary with apparently little else aside from charisma and a devotion to the Divine Lady. But then again that means Kharn was strong enough to kill two warmasters, one hopped up on a golden weapon and the sacrifice of 10i0 willing souls as well in one fight makes her even more frightening.

And I have enjoyed reading it immensely! This has been possibly the best part of the quest so far, for me.

Watching somebody who was loyal, smart and compassionate fuck up, repeatedly, and with increasing severity, because of the crushing pressure of knowing that everyone she knows is going to die in four hours. An exploration of just how a single bad decision can spiral on you, on how somebody can go from being a model soldier to a totally panic stricken and near hysteric fuckup when she wakes up on the day that the world ends.

After successfully slapping a berserk Kharn's shit, the players voted to tell the fourth and final fragment of Chiaki's soul, the most powerful and I think the incarnation of despair, to "get fucked" when she started her pre-fight banter.

In the ensuing fight, Midori died, and her friend's intervention saved her, at the cost of her own chance at returning to life. It may have also cost us one fourth of Chiaki's whole being, since the fourth personality mirror has been vacant, but we don't know for sure--especially since the other personality fragments aren't talking about her like she's gone for good.

Not so much. Yes, we made the decision at the end of the day, but it was justified in the narrative. Deculture translates the vote into a story, we had no actual say in the motivations of the character, and the option was always presented by Deculture so he is indirectly acknowledging that yes, it does fit a given interpretation of the character. From a purely narrative point of view, everything that was done, was done because Yuma wanted to do it.

Should we blame her? No, of course not, blaming a fictional character for anything is fucking stupid. Should we hate her? Sure, if you want. Everyone has a different opinion of different characters anyway.

I dunno. I figure Deculture will take the events into account somehow. There are many things that could come from this.

-Chiaki learns that Yuma mindraped her. Chaos follows

-People learn that Yumas actions were (somehow apparently) responsible for the loss of the templars and all other culexus.

-Imagine how Kyoko and Sayaka will react? Kyoko learning that Yuma mindraped one of her best friends, and Sayaka learns that the reason Murderface was so messed in the head might have been Yumas fault all along.

Someone who heard Malal survives, blames Yuma (because Malal is the best known seer) and seeks revenge on Yuma.

And so on.

There is a lot of potential writing that comes from what happened in this quest.

She is Yumas superiour officer. She told her to check on Girl A and Kharn. A superiour officer does not need to explain orders to a subordinate. Especially given that Malal was incredibly busy at the time.

Malal is secretive and all to be sure, but in this flashback I don't really see it.

When Yuma contacted Malal and asked what was up with Girl A, Malal told Yuma everything that had happened to Girl A and Kharn. There was no secrecy.

Malal would have had no way to know that Yuma would decide to mindrape Girl A, then lie about it, then run to Haruka instead using the last chance to see Kharn.

Yeah, there have been a few such votes.

A more recent example is the Braids incident. Chiaki insulted braids of Sayaka and pissed Braids off. Except several people who voted for that option did not see the insult.

Though I guess options like that are inevitable in a longrunning quest like this. All in all, they have been pretty rare.

Heck, its possible the reason why the consequences for the Midori incident were relatively light was because Deculture realised that the option could have been misunderstood.

Yuma's 14, came from a broken home where her father would routinely put out his cigarettes on her head, gets her hands burned regularly, was often preemptively beaten by her mother so her father wouldn't bother, was implied to have been either molested or raped by her father in drunken rampages, and then learned after she made her completely selfless wish that her parents ended up both dying anyway... A mind like that will instinctively look for ways to shift the blame somewhere.

Just because we had a similar set in one doesn't mean the other must have the same set. The fourth mirror could be any version of Homu that isn't Braids, Dildoes or Scarred Chiaki right now.

Before Yuma contracted she was blaming herself, but now that she gained a somewhat stable relationship in the officio, she's able to now foist blame somewhere else, like on another MG she dislikes or someone who's acting shifty. That being said, Dildoes also said that if every "incarnation" appeared, there would have been hundreds of mirrors.

This entire point in time was glossed over in the present, so that these details could be filled in during a flashback, certain relationships and motivations could be altered, and things prepared for the future.
Don't say that there's no consequences until we're back in the present and there are no consequences we have to deal with.

The fact she hates them for her own screwup makes her worse.

However given how emotional these last few threads have been, I cannot believe this will not have consequences.

One way or the other, what happened in this thread will affect the future. Either Chiaki or someone else will eventually learn what happened here. That could have all sorts of consequences.

Kharn is basically forcefully retired because of what happened here. However thanks to this flashback we now know she is completely innocent. She witched because she was stabbed by someone with an unknown blade, and Yuma did not do her job, which presumably ends up with Kharn witching out.

If it comes out that Yuma did not do her job, what effect will that have on Kharn? For all we know, Deculture could use this as an excuse to bring Kharn back to the 9th properly as an instructor or somesuch.

I understand that as they blaming themselves for people hurting them as a means of rationalizing the hurt. Once you pull them out of the shitty situation, sometimes that mindset sticks. 'This can't be right, something has to go wrong because I'm here'.. and then when they find themselves actually causing it, their reality crumbles and they push the blame elsewhere because all this time they only ever blame themselves a coping means, not really dealing with guilt over one's real actions.

Point, but again it's Murderface's story and also after all the shit has happen, she has no right to hate on them

Also most of the time anons here played smart, but since this is Yuma and a flashback they want to create a more 'deep' character.

Since their all dead and do not have to worry about screwing over who it's fine.

I disagree.

Kharn was stabbed into her soulgem with somekind of unknown dagger which caused her soulgem to start corrupting at an utterly abnormal rate. Kharn did not witch out due to depression or neglect or anything that could be blamed on her.

Malal put Kharn in a silent room and told Yuma to make sure the corruption was still in control. Yuma did not check on Kharn, and then lied to Malal about it. At this point, Kharn has been without checkups for several hours.

Kharn may well blame herself, but thanks to this flashback we know her witch transformation was artificially forced upon her by an unknown party. Kharn is innocent.

Not necessarily. She might not have any memory of the attack or being stabbed with the corruption knife.

If so, she might well blame herself and accept the title "betrayer", out of guilt, because she THINKS it was her fault that she turned into a witch due some personal weakness.

Malal is too secretive, so its possible she did not give QB full details about what happened yet, and she is about to die so the knowledge dies with her.

That would leave Yuma as the only one who would know Kharn was stabbed with the corruption knife. She might well have chosen to keep it a secret out of guilt, fear, whatever.

Most of it is training. Either herself, training Templars, or helping to train the Second's other magical girls.

She'd probably say her average day is 70% training, 20% paperwork, 10% maintenance/needs, and 10% trying to pry the rod out of Arty's arse.
~~I'm aware it doesn't add up.~~

Its hard to tell people your plans, if you never know if a deity is spying on you.

Kinda the same issue we have run into with Chiaki actually. Pinky is going to be pissed if (or rather when) she learns we are in communication with the DEagle incarnations.

Theres been lots of wondering if Pinky already knows, since you NEVER know if she is watching everything you do right at that moment.

I meant that considering all the characters we played and intereacted with Malal, it always went "Just trust me" to just keep blindly trusting someone (sure she might give a piece or two but not a clearer picture) it's hard/

What I don't understand is that this just might make things harder later on so I'm assuming that the flashback has no real consequence.

If players did think so, they would have avoided doing things that might make it harder on murderface and the gang later on Actually both Madokami, Faust and Malal all said Neither of the Kami could manifest when Malal was around since she kept her suit's limiter as low as she possibly could to prevent either of them manifesting. So she was a literal safe zone and could tell someone anything she knew, the problem was Faust could and probably would torture that information out of anyone who's NOT around Malal, since Faust as clearly stated she hates her.

Alternatively, the spymaster currently pretending to be kharn murders malal under pinky's orders.
We've got info about post WN kharn - she goes nuts, hallucinates malal and can't accept her death, nearly kills mami for trying to tell her otherwise and is generally completely out of it for a period of a few weeks.

I'm caring less on the consequences of this, and more the fact that this makes Yuma a creepy rapist. Throw away of everything that Yuma didn't know. So pretend that she doesn't know that the world's fate rested on Girl A.

Her flow of logic was this:
> Malal, a SUPERIOR OFFICER, orders her to do one simple thing.
> Yuma finds Girl A recovering from mindrape, and FREAKS OUT thinking that Malal did it. Mad enough to consider treason.
> Malal tells her up front exactly what happens. Keep in mind that Yuma was the only person she trusted with this information.
> Yuma, in order to satisfy simple curiosity, does something (by her own admission) WORSE than what she accused Malal of. Something that could have killed Girl A.

So you have someone doing something completely reprehensible for completely selfish reasons.

I can kind of get said reasons, but honestly she is lucky Malal didn't kill her right then and there.

In part the Second creates a massive no fun zone all around it, but she (and Enyo) happen to enjoy their work, so it takes up most of their time and energy. I'd imagine you rarely get Rank Leaders that out and out dislike their jobs, though, so that's probably a fairly typical attitude - that said, I'm sure it'd be simple enough to delegate most or all of it.

Well Malal was the one person willing to die to rescue her. When Kharn woke up from that drug and brainwashing stuper Strauss put her in, she probably saw Malal as a goddess in her own mind. Losing an emotional and psychological crutch, potentially at your own hands would make anyone go insane with grief. People should be lucky Risa was there to shoulder most of the grief energy or she might have witched out again.

Its also possible that the madness was a residual side-effect of the corruption knife.

That atleast is something that we will inevitably see again. Malal atleast believed that they were originally after Murderface, and Kharn was a target of opportunity.

So odds are that sooner or later, that group will come after Chiaki again and try to do to Chiaki what they did to Kharn here. Once Chiaki starts investigating, its quite possible that the events of this flashback will be revealed.

For a given definition of 'nearby'. She also there at the airport, so probably a few meters away.

If Pinky could manifest while Malal was that close, she wouldn't be able to hurt anyone but that doesn't mean she couldn't overhear anything she said.
Pinky would also see whoever Malal was talking with, and could get them when they were away from Malal.

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 05/07/14(Wed)09:18:22 No.31973281

You don't deserve to be called that. Not anymore.

You don't even deserve to wear the suit you've got on right now - the suit that the person you utterly disappointed earlier put together with her own two hands. To your exact measurements, to your exact specifications. Three weeks' worth of painstaking worth, or so she told you once, when she still thought of you as someone worth trusting. Someone worth believing in.

It's not even disappointment. What you did went past that. You broke her. You defeated her. In one brief moment of savage, paranoid self-indulgence, you shattered her confidence in you as a trusted subordinate - and you could still her scream her hate at you from her vox-speakers. About how you've condemned yourself, the remaining members of your rank, and the valiant Knights that had gathered to assist you to a horrible, painful death.

You could still feel her bitter anger at your confession, too. It left its legacy in the form of dagger-sharp pain that stabbed through your core whenever you pulled in a breath, speaking of bruised if not cracked ribs. It also left its taste on your tongue - a thick, cloying, coppery tang that never went away no matter how much you swallowed. No matter how much you spat.

You did nothing wrong. You still believe that. Haruka said as much.

You are Omegon, Culexus of the Ninth Officio, stationed in Mitakihara, Japan. En route to the Ninth's highly-experimental and secret teleportation facility, where you will be sent screaming a death you now very clearly deserve.

Along with nineteen of the only friends you've ever known, and forty knights who had foolishly decided to tag along.

You are Chitose Yuma. Coward, traitor, and liar.

"You lot at the Ninth...you're a frugal lot, aren't you?" Alondight, High Marshal of the valiantly-stupid Black Templars and the only permanently-wheeled Magical Girl you know of, mutters as she nibbles carefully on a squashed purple macaron. "This obsession with using public transportation to ferry your guests to and fro...where do all the savings go? Who benefits?" She turns to Enyo beside her. "Enyo, perhaps you'd know? Please tell me they're being used for something useful, at least--"

"The Teleportation Facility is deep underground, High Marshal." You finally rise to her most pitiful attempt at banter so far, and you hear the sound of forty knights turning to look at you as your vox speakers croak out your first words ever since your ragtag group left Headquarters. "This is the only way to access it currently. If this is any inconvenience to you, then on behalf of the Ninth, I offer our most sincere apologies."

Formal. Concise. Polite. Malal would've been proud, if she'd been here to hear it.

Alondight blinks at this, before shrugging her pauldroned shoulders. "Well, I suppose I can understand that, but..." She looks around at her knights, all of them sitting neatly in rows, some of them looking out the windows, staring at the scenery whipping past outside, trying not to appear too out of place. The High Marshal stares past them, glaring at the civilians who are also trying not to notice the horde of brutally-armored women. Some of them likely wondering just what kind of high-level cosplay convention had suddenly rolled into the city.

"...A bloody train." Alondight sighs. "A bloody commuter's train." She shakes her head. "I realize the Ninth is pragmatic in all things, but...I wasn't expecting to be ferried to my death on a train car. It lacks a certain..." The blonde makes a cyclical gesture with her squashed treat. "...Enyo, what's the word I'm looking fo--"

"Ceremony," The taciturn Marshal cuts in, and Alondight nods. "Yes. That."

You shrug again. Part of you wants to tell her to stop being so fucking fussy about riding a goddamn train, to shout that it doesn't matter, because you're all going to die in less than an hour, and she should shut her yapping macaron-hole already.

The other part of you - the part that easily wins - has you murmur a half-hearted apology instead. Unable to think of anything else but the sight of your Culexus rank leader's defeated, crestfallen form, a sight you've never seen before and one you never want to see ever again.

...You'll do your duty. When Walpurgisnacht comes, you'll do what you're supposed to do, and you'll accept the death that's coming to you.

You can at least do that much.

"Oh, stop apologizing already, it's getting on my nerves." Alondight says, and you look up to frown at her - only to see that she's smiling. "I'm just being unreasonable to get you to talk. I can complain a lot, but I'm not as bad as Mordred." She nudges the black-haired Marshal at her side with an armored elbow. "Right, Enyo? I'm not as bad as the Princess, yeah?"

"I wonder." The taciturn Marshal replies, before grunting slightly as Alondight hammers her elbow into her side with a loud clanking sound. "I...I meant, yes, High Marshal, of course."

>>31973307

"See?" Alondight's smile is a wide one, and she pops her macaron into her mouth with a flick of her clawed hand - her pale cheeks bulging with every chew. As soon as she swallows, she takes another slightly-less squashed pink one from her bag, and holds it out to you.

"Come on, then, Yuma. Flip up your visor so I can feed you one. You Culexus still eat, I presume?" At your silence, she cackles. "Don't worry, I make these myself. They're very good, everyone at the Castle loves them--"

"--only when she's looking." Another armor-denting dig makes Enyo finally turn away, her mechanical hand shielding her now-abused side as she winces in pain.

You blink at the offered macaron. The pink-colored treat perched upon brutal black claws looking like a visual metaphor- of something pure about to be ruined by the brutal, black thorns of reality.

The problem isn't that someone done fucked up. The problem is they fucked up by doing something the idea of Malal doing two posts earlier made her violently angry.

It being in a flashback, it also retcons her entire character in such a way you can throw everything she's said or done in the trash. Remember how mad she was at Kharn for being the one who killed all her friends through psychotic incompetence? Fuckin' Whoops, that didn't happen.

They build the character in their heads and have a view of it. This is a common occurence with highly imaginative people. they'd be just as pissed if the GM force-changed a character trait or a racial trait for no reason other than the lulz in a tabletop game.

Essentially it's the same thing, just not a GM at fault, so they blame everyone on the board.

no it doesn't. at all. not even remotely. we didn't know her past. now we do. and it explains everything about her. why she's so bitter, why she hates murder-chiaki, everything.

it's pure solid guilt. and she can't deal with it. so she lashes out.

>Remember how mad she was at Kharn for being the one who killed all her friends through psychotic incompetence? Fuckin' Whoops, that didn't happen

uhhhhhhh how does this contradict what's happened. Kharn can still murder everyboydy. again. it's all guilt, she's twisted it in her mind that it's Kharns fault to try and shift the blame. and hell it probably WILL be Kharns fault and checking on her wouldn't have done a damn thing

>Remember how mad she was at Kharn for being the one who killed all her friends through psychotic incompetence? Fuckin' Whoops, that didn't happen.
Except it fits that perfectly - she's externalised her own self-loathing, offloading all the rage and hatred onto Kharn and Chiaki as a coping mechanism.

The way I see it, we're an indeterminate number of loops removed from the initial timelines.

Every loop more girls become megucas and make a wide variety of wishes from the mundane to the universe altering. Then sooner or later Homuka pulls the plug and the whole thing resets exponentially increasing their power levels for the next round.

I'm betting the Blessed Lady Cult, for example, is a leftover from a previous loop which has become something quite unexpected from what it was originally supposed to be.

It's probably more likely that the people who attacked Kharn and Mirderface were members of the Cult, and that the black knife was a tool of Faust.
Pinky said that she went through a lot of trouble to set up events so that Malal died, and it explains why the attackers would have left Kharn and Murderface in a position to be recovered even though they had plenty of time to destroy their Soul Gems.

You lean back, turning slightly away from the offered treat, raising one gloved hand in both deference and apology. No, it's...you appreciate the gesture, but it's fine. You're not hungry, you don't have an appetite at the moment, and...you're no good with sweets, especially when all you can taste is your own clotting blood.

"Really?" Alondight pouts, clearly crestfallen at your refusal. "It's not good to let your blood sugar fall just before going into battle, you know? You won't have any strength left to kill heretics." She shakes her head, looking forlornly at the denied macaron, before turning to the raven-haired Marshal whose side she'd hammered mercilessly earlier. "Enyo? Come on, open wide. I can't eat something I offered to someone. There's a rule about that, right?"

"No, there isn't, High Marshal. You just don't want to look like a sugar-hungry glutton--" Another brutal clanking sound, and Enyo dutifully opens her mouth to the High Marshal, tears of pain pricking from the corners of her closed eyes. Alondight smiles at you, before cramming not just the pink macaron that you refused, but two additional ones, pulled from the bag so quickly you almost didn't see them. Enyo's eyes bulge at this, and she claps her armor-shod hand over her mouth as she turns away, gagging and choking.

"Make sure to chew thoroughly before you swallow, Marshal." Alondight reminds her, a smirk still curling her lips by the time she turns to face you. "See, Enyo understands what I'm talking about. None of that 'but those are just empty calories' or 'I'm too old for sweets' nonsense. Sweets provide the energy we need, just as much as hate fuels us to crush heretics wherever they hide." It's here that she raises her voice, addressing her black-armored comrades. "ISN'T THAT RIGHT, TEMPLARS?"

"NO PITY! NO REMORSE! NO SURRENDER!"

[1/2]

Alondight nods at this, a knowing smile baring white, perfect teeth. "So what I'm trying to get at here, Yuma, in case you didn't notice - is that I'm trying to get you to talk about just what happened back there. Yes, I know, it's crude and awfully blunt of me, and predictably foreign." She waves your protests away.

"I don't call your values or customs into question, please don't misunderstand, it's just that I believe the time for overt displays of politeness is over. After all, we ARE being sent to prevent the End of the World, and it's likely most of us won't be getting back home in one piece - or at all." Alondight nods again. "We'll be fighting side by side in the worst environment ever, so I'd at least like to be illuminated on certain matters involving those I ally with."

...So she's asking what Malal was angry about, huh.

"Do you begrudge me if I do?" Alondight leans back on her seat, crossing her arms over her tabard-draped breastplate. "It's not everyday you see the infamous Miss Malal brutalize a cherished subordinate like that, screaming hate loud enough to pierce the soul." She gestures to you. "Just what did you do, Chitose Yuma? What sin have you committed?"

How do you respond?

Which reminds me that Midori is supposed to be 168cm tall which is quite tall for a Japanese girl, while Kumatora is a more average 157cm so Midori would probably tower over here a bit.

Hmm... Maybe I can play around with that

She needs to know that whatever Malal said, what we did probably isn't going to be responsible for the deaths of her Templars. But we can't be --too- open about Officio Business.

We did something we weren't supposed to do, and we didn't get to a job that Malal had tasked us with as a result.

And how is that contrary to what we've seen in this flashback?

Yuma's been extremely curt with us, and has been extremely unwilling to spend time around us. Nothing has been contradicted, here, aside from assumptions that people have made about her motives.

>A Pinky promise?

>FINE GEEZ

>Take them.
>Take them for your own, nya.

>Getting tired of this "not knowing shit" shit.

>It's not like we're mindwiping her, and cmon let's not be in the dark for once. I doubt Yuma is continuing to give a fuck at this point.

>Oh nothing, just karma whiplash~

>End of the world in a couple hours here, let's not die in the dark. "What's the worst that can happen?"

>Fuck it, fine. I want to know. And Chiaki is fine now anyway.

>She won't know and this is important information. Making the mother of all omelets here, can't fret over every egg.

Oh shut the fuck up you shiters. Yuma flipped her shit when she thought that Malal might have mindraped Girl A and then she goes and does it HERSELF. So fuck off with your "Decu doesn't put OOC options", Decu can make mistakes and this was one of those times.

Hmm, personally I don't think its difficult to justify.

Yuma needed to verify what had happened. Murderface wouldnt tell her' so she took it.

Unfortunstely this had expected consequences and having lost two whole hours to this investigation, confused, disoriented, and feelimg more than a little sick about what shed done, she lied to Malal about it while she tried to sort it out in her head.

Head on straight, she reported like the good little second Malal has trained her to be.
